Roosevelt Dictates Auto Peace; Strike Averted as Warring Factions Accept Compromise

AAA Claims Farm Income Gain of 55% In One Year

Takes Credit for Share of Agriculture Recovery.

Optimistic Outlook Is Held for 1934

Removal of Land From Production Called Major Problem.

"A partial measure of economic recovery" has been furnished the American farmer through administration of the agricultural adjustment act, according to a report made public yesterday by Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace.

The report tells of the Federal Government's endeavor to restore farm purchasing power during the nine months from May, 1933, to February, 1934, and claims an increase of nearly 55 per cent in total farm income from crops in 1933 over 1932.

Chester C. Davis, farm administrator, who made the report to Secretary Wallace, said in the foreword:

"In the short time the act has been in operation, a partial measure of economic recovery has been brought to American agriculture.

Sees Future Benefits.

"Total farm income from crops in 1933, including rental and benefit payments, is estimated to have been $3,271,000,000, as compared with $2,113,000,000 in 1932, an increase of nearly 55 per cent.

"Part of this recovery was undoubtedly due to the adjustment program getting under way. With live stock and live stock products the production of which for market covers a longer period, it is not possible to make adjustments so rapidly. It should be added that the full result of a number of important projects launched in 1933 has not yet been felt.

"It is expected they will become increasingly evident in 1934."

Much of the increase in the 1933 income of farmers from crops has been the result of programs for cotton, tobacco, hogs and wheat under the production-adjustment provisions of the act, the report states. Production-adjustment programs for these commodities are being carried into 1934, a long-time program for corn and hogs is under way, and a program for adjustments in the dairy industry is being formulated.

Removal of Surplus Cited.

Under the marketing agreement and licensing provisions of the act, the report says, considerable improvement has been made in returns to producers of milk, fruits and vegetables. Removal of surplus products—wheat through export and butter and pork through relief distribution—has been a further aid to farm products.

Completion of the programs for adjusting production of corn, wheat, cotton and tobacco may withdraw from production approximately 40,000,000 acres of land, Davis reports, adding:

"The removal of 40-odd million acres of land from our total crop area raises puzzling questions as to regiona and commodity competition, rotations replacement crops, use of labor and the like.

Land Disposal Still Puzzles.

"Practicable plans already have been worked out for different regions to answer the question of what farmers are to do with the acres taken out of production.

"Readjustments occasioned by taking land out of production are complicated still further by the human phase of the problem. Provision must be made to see that the hired laborers and tenants do not bear the full brunt of the adjustment. The problem becomes even more difficult when considering the retirement of large acreages of submarginal land."

The report suggests that as the Administration's programs have progressed it has been indicated that important advantages would result if only one contract were drawn covering all commodities, and administered by one production control association. Under such a plan it would be possible to center attention on adjustments in the light of their effect upon the whole business of farming instead of upon one enterprise.

$100,000 Fire Hits Norfolk Warehouse

Pender Plant Burns; Home Lost 2 Weeks Ago.

Norfolk, Va., March 25 (Spl.).—Fire of unknown origin swept the brick warehouse of the Pender Grocery Co., main store of the "D. P." chain of groceries, causing a damage estimated at from $75,000 to 100,000 today.

The $25,000 home of David Pender, for whom the store was named, was destroyed by fire two weeks ago.

The stubbornness of the blaze today was due in a great measure to two elevator shafts at opposite corners of the warehouse through which constant drafts kept the blaze raging in different sections of the building.

Wirt Ready to Name 'Red' in Brain Trust

Educator Asks Congress to Probe "Dictator" Conspiracy.

Gary, Ihd., March 25 (AP).—Dr. William A. Wirt, founder and head of Gary's "model school system," today asked investigation by a special Congressional committee of his charges that certain members of the so-called "brain trust" plotted revolution.

[It appeared probable last night that a Congressional inquiry into Dr. Wirt's charges would be made. Representative Bulwinkle, of North Carolina, said he would introduce a resolution for that purpose today —Editor's note.]

Wirt's charges were read into the record of a session of the House Interstate Commerce Commission Committee Friday by James Rand, jr., and declared that one of the President's advisers said he believed "We can keep Mr. Roosevelt there until we are ready to supplant him with a Stalin."

"I shall be glad to appear before a special Congressional committee to investigate the charges made in my letter read by Mr. Rand," Wirt said, "and if the committee asks me and I am convinced the welfare of the Nation demands it, I shall name the 'brain-truster' who made the statements."

Wirt added, however, that he preferred not appearing before the House Interstate Commerce Committee headed by Representative

Lawyers Urge Security Act Be Rewritten

Bar Association Committee Backs 14 Amendments "to Cure Defects."

Fourteen amendments to the securities act of 1933 that should be made immediately, "in order to cure some of the obvious defects and to remove the brake on recovery," were recommended yesterday by a special committee of the American Bar Association.

Permanent and complete revision of the act, the committee reports, should be made after a careful investigation with the aid of "corporation directors and executives, bankers and lawyers familiar with the practical problems."

Such an investigation, the committee believes, will make it apparent the act can be greatly simplified and clarified and that the substance of many provisions should be changed.

The report points out that "the act embodies the broadest definitions and uses the most general languages, and is extraordinarily complex. As a result, the interpretation of many of its provisions is very vague and uncertain. It imposes drastic liabilities, in essence in terrorem, which are regarded by those made subject to them as unfair and unjustified. It radically alters the ordinary established machinery for the distribution of securities. It rides roughshod over legal principles long established in our law."

Handicap to Capital.

The committee, composed of Chester I. Long, chairman, Washington, D. C.; James M. Graham, Springfield, Ill.; Herbert A. Friedlich, Chicago; A. I. Henderson,

Hoot Mon! Those Scots Are Hard Ones to Rob

Aberdeen, Scotland, March 25 (AP).—It sounds like a joke to associate a burglary with the City of Aberdeen, whose thrifty inhabitants have a reputation for safeguarding their money, but it was no joke for the burglars.

A pair of them blasted open a safe in a bake shop this morning and stole $1,100. Half the police of Scotland Yard were put on the trail and two suspects were captured in Glasgow. The money was recovered.

Architect Wins Medal.

New York, March 25 (AP).—The American Institute of Architects announced tonight that Roger H. Bullard, New York architect, has been awarded the gold medal for the prize-winning design in the fourth small house architectural competition sponsored by Better Homes in America.

Austria Faces Presidential Dictatorship

Broad Powers Revealed as Vienna Watches Army Display.

Vienna, March 25 (AP).—The outline of Austria's new "corporative" constitution was published in the official government Gazette today.

At the same time the government paraded its army through the streets of Vienna in the greatest show of military force since Parliament was shelved.

The most striking provision of the new constitution gives the president powers similar to those possessed by the late Emperor Franz Josef when he ascended the throne after crushing a republican revolution in 1848.

The president will rule through the constitution, but may change it whenever he thinks an emergency demands. But the people will be given an opportunity to express their opinion at the polls whenever the government thinks this advisable. Popular initiative, however is barred and the people will not have constitutional rights to elect their own government.

All legislation must be initiated by the government, which will be advised, but not controlled, by four consultative bodies.

These will be the Staatsrat (state council), 40 to 50 members appointed by the president; the Bundeskulturrat (federal cultural council), consisting of representatives of churches, religious societies and schools; the federal economic council, chosen from business, industrial, agricultural and financial circles, and the provincial council, consisting of governors and finance ministers of the various provinces.

The public will be excluded from sessions of these advisory bodies.

The words "republic" and "Democracy" will be omitted from the new constitution and the government will be given the strictest censorship powers over the press, theater, radio and films.

All universities, teachers and colleges will be under the exclusive control of the federal government.

Outlook Best Since '29, World Chamber Says

Paris, March 25 (U.P.).—The prosperity outlook is more promising than at any time since 1929, the International Chamber of Commerce declared today.

The chamber, however, warned that further depreciation of currencies or abandonment of the gold standard by France or other gold countries would delay recovery seriously.

Pope Leads in Colorful Rites As Palm Sunday Is Observed

Rome, March 25 (AP).—Fresh green palm leaves adorned thousands of Roman household religious ornaments and relics today, Palm Sunday, while a special palm was presented to Pope Pius, with a delicately painted miniature gleaming from its center and ornamented with flowers.

The green palm leaves symbolized the palm and olive branches with which joyful Jews welcomed Christ's entrance to Jerusalem at Passover.

The Bresca family of San Remo, in accordance with a custom instituted by Pope Sixtus V, presented the palm to Pope Pius.

On September 10, 1856, Pope Sixtus was witnessing the raising of the obelisk which stands in the center of St. Peter's Plaza when the incident occurred which caused him to confer this privilege upon the Bresca family.

Ropes slackened as the big monument was brought upright and for a moment it threatened to crash upon the throngs of spectators.

The Pope had commanded silence during the ceremony under pain of death.

"Throw water on the ropes!" suddenly shouted a sailor in the crowd. The heavy obelisk ceased to totter over the heads of the crowd.

Brought before the Pontiff for shouting when silence had been commanded, Capt. Bresca, the hero of the occasion, was not only pardoned, but asked to name his reward. He chose the privilege of supplying the Pope with Palm Sunday plants.

Scores Hurt In Rioting Over France

50 Injured at Toulon, Gunfire at Tours in Political Unrest.

Warning of Doumergue on Civil War Is Ignored.

Paris, March 25 (AP).—Sharp fighting flared in provincial France today as political extremists, ignoring the plea of Premier Gaston Doumergue to guard against "civil war," battled each other.

Fifty persons were injured in a clash at Toulon between Royalists and Socialists outside a meeting hall before police reinforcements could dispel the crowd.

A score of others nursed bruises suffered in violent street battles between Rightist and Leftist followers at Tours, where gendarmes reported shots were fired.

Precautions were taken there to prevent further violence tomorrow night at a demonstration called by the anti-Fascist front in protest against a manifestation of the Rightist organization, Solidarite Francaise, organized by the perfume manufacturer, Francois Coty.

But the aged premier, who in a national broadcast told France yesterday that foreign invasion was to be feared as a result of threatening internal unrest, counted today upon the support of 3,000,000 war veterans, pledged to "save France from civil war and the risk of foreign invasion."

The council of the veterans' national federation unanimously voted to launch a campaign to reform French politics. The program is expected to propose dissolution of Parliament, reform of the constitution and votes for women.

"Conscious of its duty, the federation decided to take a part in public life to assure predominance of general interest over private interests," said the resolution, adopted by 500 delegates.

Italians Vote Duce Support

99-to-1 National Ballot Is Ratification of His Foreign Policy.

Rome, March 25 (AP).—Premier Mussolini received a sweeping reavowal of faith and support from Italy's voters today when at the head of 400 government-selected candidates he was elected to a seat in the twenty-ninth Chamber of Deputies, which meets April 28.

Returns from all parts of the country indicated that the 10,560,000 voters invited to take part in the elections had cast their ballots almost unanimously for the list submitted to them by the grand council of Fascism.

There was no opposition list, but the voter had the right to accept or reject the official candidates.

First unofficial reports indicated around 99 per cent of the vote favored the government.

The balloting was described by government spokesmen and the press as a plebiscite to show the nation's faith in its leader and ratify his acts in the international as well as the domestic field.

The former include a stand for German rearmament as a solution of the arms question and insistence on the necessity of reorganizing the League of Nations.

That Love Light Flickers Feebly If Milady Diets

Chicago, March 25 (AP).—If the love light's gone from your eyes it may be your diet. Anyway, that was what Dr. Harry E. Pine, president of the Illinois State Society of Optometrists, said today.

"There is no doubt," he said, "that dieting to lose weight, practiced so frequently by girls, causes eye disorders and loss of the magic sparkle."

If, he added, you want your orbs to have "It," eat three square meals a day.

Woman Snatches Gun, But Ruse Frees Bandit

St. Louis, March 25 (AP).—As Mr. and Mrs. William Stamos prepared to close their restaurant a robber stepped up and demanded the day's receipts. Mrs. Stamos wrested the revolver from him and, as he fled, shouted to passersby for assistance.

Four youths grabbed the fleeing robber, only to release him as he pleaded: "Give me a break. It's only a family argument."

Two Baby Beds Arrive, So Woman Has Twins

Omaha, Nebr., March 25 (AP).—James Barnes, living on a ranch near Albion, Nebr., ordered a baby mattress from an Omaha store. The store shipped two by mistake. Today, the company was informed, Mrs. Barnes had given birth to twins.

Horton Smith Golf Winner; Jones Trails

Victor Cards Total of 284; Wood 2d; Georgian Tied for 13th.

By Alan Gould
(Associated Press Sports Editor).

Augusta, Ga., March 25 (AP).—Picking up where he left off in Georgia four years ago as the last man to whip Bob Jones in open golf competition, lanky Horton Smith, of Chicago, paced the professionals to a smashing triumph over the former world champion today in the final round of the $5,000 Masters Invitation tournament.

Smith, leading from start to finish of the four-day battle over the beautiful Augusta National course, rose to the emergency, with his chances at stake, by holing a 10-foot putt on the seventeenth green for a birdie and won the tournament from blond Craig Wood, of Deal, N. J., by a 1-stroke margin. Smith, with successive rounds of 70—72—70—72, finished 4 under par with a total of 284 and captured $1,500 first money. Wood tallied 71—74—69—71—285, and collected $800.

Dozen Ahead of Jones.

An even dozen professionals, the entire "money list," finished in front of Jones, who kept the banner flying, nevertheless, by scoring another round in even par, 72, despite a bad start, and winding up with a total of 294, 10 strokes behind the flying Smith.

Jones had good company in his tie for thirteenth place. He was deadlocked with Denny Shute, the present holder of the British Open championship, and his old rival and playing partner, Walter Hagen, who started today's round five shots ahead of Bob and lost them all with a 77. Shute had a 72 and was tied with Jones for the second straight day.

His Worst Defeat.

Jones, equipped with everything except his old putting touch, averted a complete rout in his comeback by the brilliant way he battled difficulties and old man par on the last two rounds, but the margin of his defeat nevertheless was the worst since he first entered open competition as a boy "wonder" of 18 in 1920 at Inverness. This was the first time since he became a National golf figure that the Georgian finished "outside the money" and the only parallel set-back was his defeat in the National open at Oakmont in 1927, when he landed in eleventh place.

In the final standing, as a matter of fact, more professionals topped

7,500 Watch Huge Telescope Mirror Poured

Corning, N. Y., March 25 (AP).—Twenty tons of molten glass, to form the world's largest telescope "eye," were poured into a form today before a distinguished audience of scientists and thousands of laymen who taxed the hospitality of this famous little city of glass makers.

By nightfall the last ladle of brilliantly glowing glass was spread in the brick form which will stand for ten months while the composition hardens. Ten hours were required to transfer the liquid glass from the furnace, where it has been heating since February 15, to the mold housed in a brick igloo.

If, as scientists anticipate, the 200-inch mirror emerges from the annealing tank flawless, it will enable man to gaze into unfathomed depths of the great void beyond the earth. The astronomical vision, if all steps of the experiment are as successful as those already taken, will be increased four-fold.

100 Ladles Poured.

After an hour's rehearsal, Charles J. Wilson, chief ladeler, gave the signal to start pouring.

With flood lights focused on the workmen, the door to the furnace slid upward. The giant dipper at the end of a 20-foot handle swung into the dazzling mass of liquid glass and came out with 750 pounds of the boro-silicate composition.

An arm held the ladle to an overhead track. Along this the scoop moved to the mold door.

Only 400 pounds of 100 ladles dropped into the mold. The remainder hardened so quickly out-

Death Toll in Japanese Holocaust Put at 1,556

President Off On Gulf Fishing Trip Tomorrow

Will Go to Florida by Train and Then Board Astor's Yacht.

Satisfied with the outcome of automobile labor difficulties, President Roosevelt went ahead last night with plans for his long-promised fishing cruise in Southern waters.

He plans to leave Washington tomorrow evening by train for Jacksonville, Fla., where he will go aboard Vincent Astor's yacht, Nourmahal. Escorted by the destroyer Ellis, the big yacht will steam southward for a week's fishing in the gulf stream.

The President plans to be back in the Capital within 10 days, the constitutional time limit for executive action or legislation.

Marvin H. McIntyre, a White House secretary, will accompany his chief to Jacksonville and then go on to Miami to establish headquarters. He will be in daily wireless communication with the Nourmahal. This is taken to mean the cruise will end at that city.

Some time ago the President indicated this trip would depend on how well things progressed on the Hill. His decision to go indicates satisfaction. He is still counting on a May adjournment of Congress.

Woman Shaves Head To Beat Hairdressers

New York, March 25 (AP).—Mrs. Lucy Cotton Thomas, patroness of many young musicians, has shaved her head in a "one-woman revolt" against the wiles of hairdressers. She purposes to wear wigs of various tints that will harmonize with whatever gown she chooses.

"This hairdressing business has become a racket," she said. "They get a woman in, give her a shampoo and wash, and for the rest of her life the woman, to keep her hair right, remains a victim. And each bill is for $15 or $20."

Schools May Give Free Lunch To Needy Throughout Summer

Extension of the school free lunch program throughout the summer, if favorable response is given the service during the Easter holidays, was reported to be under consideration by District officials yesterday.

Continuation of the program throughout the Easter holidays, beginning next Friday, is planned as an experiment to determine how many children will go to school, when they don't have to, in order to get food.

"I am anxious to see how this experiment works out," Mrs. Katharine McF. Ansley, director of the central school kitchen, said yesterday. "Children wouldn't care to go to their school buildings to do extra studying during the holidays, but there is a possibility the hungry ones will be glad to report each day in order to get lunch."

A careful check will be kept during the 10-day holidays to determine how many are taking advantage of the service. The results are expected to provide an excellent barometer of relief needs in the District.

The lunches will not be served on Saturdays. The program may be extended to Saturday, after school resumes, if the response to the holiday service is strong. Members of the Board of Education have criticized the elimination of the service on Saturdays.

The central kitchen on Wisconsin avenue, where the food is prepared and distributed, began operating a week ago, and is not yet in full swing. By Friday, 3,500 pupils were being served, about half the number entitled to the service. The balance are being accommodated by Earl Harrington, the restaurateur who conducted the program while the central kitchen was being equipped. Mr. Harrington will continue serving children not being cared for by the central kitchen until the entire program is taken over by the kitchen.

Mrs. Ansley attributed the delay in serving the full percentage of lunches to the fact that her workers need to be trained to do the work. The employes, she said, are willing workers but have not had experience in working in large kitchens before. They are CWA employes.

Provisions Kept Secret

Peace Follows Week of Parleys With Johnson and President.

Manufacturers First to Recede

NRA Chief Is Gratified, Calls Situation Worst Yet Faced.

By Felix Bruner.

Settlement of the labor controversy which threatened to result in an automobile strike was announced last night by the White House.

The announcement came after a conference of labor leaders with President Roosevelt, during which the President virtually dictated the terms of the agreement and insisted upon its adoption.

The agreement provided that unions need not disclose the identity of their members to employers unless specifically ordered to do so by the President.

Employers Agree First.

Earlier in the day, automobile manufacturers met with Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, NRA Administrator, for 15 minutes. Following their meeting it was indicated that they had agreed on a settlement.

That this settlement was not altogether satisfactory to the labor group was made evident by the fact that after the manufacturers left Johnson's office the labor representatives held a long conference with him and then five of their number went to the White House. The White House conference lasted nearly three hours.

Some slight difference still existed between the two groups following the conference. Johnson immediately got in touch with the manufacturers, after declaring that "only a word separates them." An hour later word came from the White House that the controversy had been settled.

Compromise Settlement.

William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, when asked afterward whether he and representatives of the automobile workers had agreed to the settlement because it was what they wanted or because the President had insisted upon it, said that the President's insistence had much to do with the acceptance.

It was apparent that the settlement was not altogether satisfactory to either side, but that the manufacturers, who heretofore had been adamant, had been the first to agree. The settlement is believed to contain elements that had not been considered in earlier proposals.

Following the White House conference, the union representatives returned to Johnson's office, where they awaited a reply from the manufacturers. When the reply finally came, they went to the headquarters of the American Federation of Labor, where other members of their group awaited them, to send the word back to the workers in Detroit and other automobile cities. Green indicated that an amplifying statement would come from the Federation later.

The settlement followed a series

Lainnaux, Stavisky Gangster, Gives Up

Police Search Ended as Fugitive Reports.

Paris, March 25 (AP).—Georges Hainnaux, alias "Joe the Terror," alleged Stavisky gangster, today gave himself up to police after detectives had hunted for him all night.

The former wrestler and boxer is supposed to be the mysterious person who handed the police long-missing check-stubs of the late Serge Stavisky, central figure in the collapse of the Bayonne Municipal Pawnshop.

His arrest was ordered when authorities were informed the one-time boxer, who is a lieutenant of Stavisky's former secretary, Gilbert Romagnino, still possessed more stubs which he was using "to gain financial advantages."

Wedding Trip Crash Kills Kentucky Man

Paducah, Ky., March 24 (AP).—J. V. Dalton, 23, died today, victim of an automobile wreck last night, which occurred 30 minutes after his marriage and which also cost the life of one of the wedding attendants, Miss Henrietta Seck, 23. Miss Seck was killed instantly when the machine, driven by Dalton, struck a tree.

The bride and Thomas Willingham, another of the wedding attendants, were injured. Willingham seriously.

New Warning To Stabilize Given Nations

International Chamber Sees "Money War" as Alternative.

(Associated Press.)

World governments were warned by sixteen internationally renowned industrialists, bankers and economists yesterday that further delay in monetary stabilization might lead to a "new wave of currency instability."

These experts, constituting the monetary committee of the International Chamber of Commerce, made this prediction in a resolution calling upon all governments to utilize the present "propitious opportunity" to stabilize.

"It would be idle to pretend," the committee said, "that world conditions have become so stable that all fears of new complications definitely have been eliminated.

"Improvement in the foreign trade position of individual countries off the gold standard has, in effect, been attained by the tacit acquiescence of the countries still remaining on gold."

The chamber predicted that if nongold countries sought further advantages there might be a further departure of gold countries from that standard with the probability of a new world money war.

The resolution did not name countries, but it was pointed out that France was the major nation remaining on gold and that she had had some difficulty in doing so. Other major nations, the United States and England in particular, have attained a de facto stabilization, but that is not regarded as a legal warrant that such stabilization will be eliminated.

In fact, the chamber intimated that the contrary might be the case, and forecast consequent departure from the standard by present gold countries.

"The chamber has no desire," the report said, "to anticipate the course of events and to picture the outlook as gloomier than it actually is. On the contrary, the chamber firmly holds the view that in some definite aspect the outlook is more promising than it has been since 1929.

"Nevertheless, it is impossible to overlook the fact that a new wave of currency instability, due to abandonment of the gold standard by any important country now adhering to it, would, in all probability, have the following consequences:

A—New pressure upon the level of gold prices. Effect of exchange depreciation has been, on balance, a deflationary one.

"B—So far from the advent of a new era of exchange depreciation assisting revival (of international trade), the chamber believes that nothing would be more fatal than such an eventuality, for it would bring in its train a new harvest of antidumping exchange duties, and new quota regulation which would prove fatal to recovery.

Body in Creek Starts Probe

Coroner Sifts Mystery Death of Hagerstown Postal Worker.

Hagerstown, Md., March 25 (Spl.). The body of Reginald Penner, 48, employe of the Hagerstown Postoffice, who disappeared while en route to work Tuesday, was found today in the Antietam Creek, near Security.

Magistrate Richard Duffey, acting coroner, is continuing an investigation.

A coat found hanging on the limb of a tree nearby was identified as Penner's.

A neighbor near Penner's lodging place told police he heard some one invite Penner to ride to work in his car. The authorities have been endeavoring to learn the identity of the driver.

Penner was an unusual character, fellow workers said. Employed as day janitor, he was well educated and spent all of his spare time reading classical literature.

Strike Talk Fails To Injure Output Of American Steel

Cleveland, March 25 (AP).—Despite the handicap of unsettled labor conditions, the magazine Steel said today that demand showed surprising strength last week as operations eased off only one point to 49 per cent.

"The explanation for this," says the weekly review, "is that while strikes have been threatened in many iron and steel consuming plants, so far comparatively few have actually developed to the point of interrupting the flow of material.

"In Detroit, the hotbed of discord, steelworks operations actually rose 7 points to 100 per cent; New England advanced 8 points to 71 per cent; Eastern Pennsylvania ½ point to 33 per cent. In only two districts were there declines, Pittsburgh, off 2 points to 33 per cent, Wheeling, 4 to 66.

"Railroad orders are increasing and structural steel requirements are gaining moderately under seasonal influences."

Soldiers' Home Costs In Virginia Defended

Richmond, March 25 (AP).—Gen. William McK. Evans, commander of Robert E. Lee Camp Soldiers Home here, said yesterday that the home is being operated as "economically as possible," and that if the present staff was reduced it would be impossible to give the veterans care they need.

Gen. Evans' statement came in response to a report in which T. McCarthy Downs, State auditor, had suggested costs at the home might be lowered by a cutting of the staff and a reassignment of duties.

Roosevelt Settles Auto Labor Controversy, Averts Strike

of conferences lasting nearly a week, during which labor representatives saw the President three times and the manufacturers saw him twice. Johnson kept in constant touch with both sides.

"It was the worst situation we have encountered," Johnson declared.

Johnson was grimly determined as the labor conference broke up and the committee went to the White House. Both he and Green freely stated that the White House meeting would be the last. The only alternatives were—an agreement yesterday or a strike today.

The two factions, which never once during the long period of negotiations met together, were flatly unable to agree. Johnson was unable to bring them together. The President had failed in two previous attempts.

Labor Is Reluctant.

The length of the White House conference, as well as the statements of the labor men, indicated how reluctant they were to agree to the President's proposal.

"This will end it here," Green said as he went to the White House. Johnson declared that "this is the end, one way or another."

The difference which separated the two factions was simple in itself but far-reaching in its possibilities and in its effect on future New Deal labor negotiations.

It was merely a question of whether the unions should reveal the identity of their members to the employers.

In elections called to elect workers' representatives in the automobile plants, the employers agreed to turn over to Government representatives the names of their employes, to assist the Government men in conducting the elections. The union leaders agreed to turn over to the Government representatives the lists of their members, with the understanding that their identity should not be revealed to the employers.

Factions' Charges.

Employers stood upon their demand that the identity of the union members must be revealed to them. They insisted that the American Federation of Labor was attempting to seize control of their organizations and that it proposed to use secret means to accomplish its purpose. The Federation objected to company unions. Each side accused the other of coercing workers into joining its particular type of union.

During all the negotiations, Green led the workers' group. He was assisted by William Collins, who represents the A. F. of L. in the automobile districts. In the final conference with the President there were present, besides Green and Collins, Arthur Greer, John Bailey and Richard L. Byrd, all heads of the local automobile workers' unions.

Since the negotiations started last week, President Roosevelt has been devoting most of his attention to the controversy and has held himself ready at all times to talk with either side. The situation admittedly was one of the most serious that has confronted the Administration. On settlement of the controversy depended the future of the relationship of the recovery administration to labor and the future of the recovery program itself.

Opposed Company Unions.

The National recovery act guarantees to workers the right to collective bargaining. The automobile controversy was over the question of the form that such bargaining should take, but in addition the whole principle of collective bargaining as set up by the recovery act was at stake.

Labor unions in the automobile industry have been organized since the recovery act became effective. Unlike most A. F. of L. unions, they are "vertical" organizations, organizations comprising all kinds of workers in each plant, rather than craft unions. The A. F. of L. unions are directly opposed to company unions, which have sprung up in the automobile and other industries under NRA.

Several times during the course of the conferences it appeared that an agreement had been reached. Saturday night Gen. Johnson announced that such an agreement was imminent and even that a statement had been prepared. An hour later he said the settlement had failed.

Praised by President.

Heads of most of the large automobile manufacturing concerns participated in the negotiations. At times the entire group met and at other times they were represented by committees. Representing the automobile group at the concluding meeting with Johnson were Alvan Macauley, president of the Packard Motor Co.; C. W. Nash, chairman of the Nash Motor Co., and Nicholas Kelley, of the Chrysler Automobile Co.

Following announcement of the settlement it was said at the White House that President Roosevelt appreciated "the cooperation and good public spirit that has been exhibited by both parties." It was said he felt that "both have been actuated by consideration of the public good."

Insull Avoids Arrest; Stays Out of Port

Watch at Port Said Is Awaiting Appearance of Exile Ship.

Port Said, Egypt, March 25 (AP). The lookout for Samuel Insull settled into a monotonous routine in this city today while authorities and the Mohammedan population transferred their interests to tomorrow's celebration of the Moslem feast of Bairam.

With all doors closed to Insull, unless he decided it would be safe to put in here or some other regular port, inhabitants suggest the Arabian saying, "Close the door and you tempt one to leave by the window," may well find justification in the former financier's case.

There are many who think the S. S. Maiotis may have landed him clandestinely in some isolated region, and now is playing a game to keep attention concentrated on itself.

Dispatches from Istanbul said a well-informed source there in denying rumors that Rumania had accorded Insull a five-year sojourn, said that authorities in Bucharest would arrest him promptly.

Turkey and Bulgaria likewise have promised to arrest him.

Police Lack Trace Of Stolen Medals

A canvass of Washington second-hand stores and nearby county pawn shops failed yesterday to reveal a trace of nine missing medals stolen Saturday from the Unknown Soldier's case in the trophy room of Arlington National Cemetery.

Local and military authorities are searching for the thief. The citations, presented to America's "Unknown" by various patriotic organizations, were on public exhibition in the trophy room. The intruder used a screw driver to remove a door of the glass case.

The theft was reported to police by Col. Charles G. Mortimer, U. S. A. (retired), officer in charge of the room. The medals will be easily recognized because of their inscriptions.

Pay Real Auto Dispute Issue, Coughlin Says

8-Month Wages, 12-Month Dividends Described as Fight's Basis.

Detroit, March 25 (AP).—The Rev. Father Charles E. Coughlin in an address today said "there is every indication that the Government will act swiftly, justly and sanely" to settle the threatened strike in the automobile industry.

The issue, Father Coughlin said, "the real question behind the smoke screen, is whether the automobile industry shall continue to pay wages for eight months of its seasonal duration while the stockholders draw dividends for 12 months."

The issue must be solved, he said, by the Government, "which is bigger than any labor organization and bigger than any industry."

The address was broadcast.

Father Coughlin defended the principle on which labor unions are based, but criticized the American Federation of Labor for failing to live up to what he said were its "immense resources."

The priest said the income of the American Federation of Labor amounts to approximately $30,000,000. "With that income the federation should have accomplished 30 times as much each year," he said.

Father Coughlin said the automobile workers "must organize and, thanks to the attitude of the automobile manuafcturers, which for 30 years have opposed every attempt of its workers to do so, there is only one organization to which the workers can turn, the American Federation of Labor."

Police Await New Cab War

Fighting Goes on Despite LaGuardia's Edict on Election.

New York, March 25 (AP).—Police were mobilized in anticipation of further disorders by striking taxicab drivers tonight as union leaders and fleet operators considered Mayor LaGuardia's proposal for a city-sponsored plebiscite on union representation.

Following a night of sporadic outbreaks, Assistant Chief Inspector John J. Sullivan detailed 150 detectives to special duty in Manhattan, Brooklyn and the Bronx.

In addition, all motorcycle sidecar police were ordered to remain on duty until 3 a. m.

At least half a dozen cruising taxicabs were attacked during the night. Two pedestrian and a driver were hurt.

Patrick Ferguson, 35, was run down by a cab speeding away from a crowd of strikers in the Bronx. He suffered a possible fracture of the skull.

Strikers or their sympathizers tossed a lighted match into the gasoline tank of another cab in the Bronx. The cab was virtually destroyed before firemen arrived.

The disorders continued despite Mayor LaGuardia's ultimatum that violence must cease.

County Corn-Hog Directors Named

Charles Town, W. Va., March 25 (Spl.).—Representatives of five districts in Jefferson County were elected to the board of directors of the County Corn-Hog Control Association at community organization meetings yesterday.

Community committee members also were chosen.

Officers named were: Charles Town district, Milton Burr, chairman, Grover L. Bush, James W. Milton; Kabletown district, Charles R. Langdon, chairman, Herman H. Huyett, Robert R. Smith; Middleway district, W. O. Macoughtry, chairman, D. W. Staubs, Frank Gruber. The meeting of the Harpers Ferry district was postponed until Tuesday.

Appeals Session Set in Richmond

Richmond, March 25 (AP).—The United States Court of Appeals will convene in Richmond on Tuesday, April 3, and will try 38 civil and three criminal cases. Decisions are to be handed down in most of the 44 cases still pending before the court.

The three criminal cases which will come before the Appeals Court from district courts, concern counterfeit charges again Carl Moschetti and Marion S. Butler, indicted in Norfolk in October, and Stewart Price, of Stokesdale, N. C., indicted in Greensboro, N. C., in December. Moschetti and Butler are charged with having circulated bogus $5 notes in Richmond and Phoebus, Va. Price is accused of having published and circulated counterfeit $10 bills in North Carolina and Virginia.

Charles Town Pastor Reports Nephew Dead

Charles Town, W. Va., March 25 (Spl.).—The Rev. J. W. Rosenberger, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was notified yesterday of the death of his nephew, Ernest T. Fry, 60, in the City Hospital at Baltimore.

Funeral services will be held Tuesday at 10:30 a. m. from the Rev. Rosenberger's home here. The Rev. W. D. Eye, pastor of the Leetown Methodist Episcopal Church, will officiate.

Virginia Gas Rate Cut.

Kilmarnock, Va., March 25 (Spl.). A reduction of approximately 20 per cent in the cooking and water heating gas rate of the Virginia East Coast Utilities, Inc., has been announced by O. G. Martino, vice president and general manager of the utilities, who filed the new rate, effective in April, with the State Corporation Commission.

Bar Association Indorses 14 Amendments to Security Act

New York City and William S. Dalzell, Pittsburgh, said, "it seems certain the act must operate as a hindrance to the flow of capital through the distribution of securities."

Following is a summary furnished by the committee of the proposed amendments:

The first amendment proposed relates to the definition of the term "underwriter" and would exclude certain persons, performing clerical services such as depositaries, fiscal agents and actual underwriters from the liabilities imposed by the act upon those who take up securities and sell them as a part of the distribution.

The second amendment is intended to make more definite and certain the class of securities exempt under the act, while the third amendment adds to and clarifies the class of exempt transactions. It eliminates liability imposed under the act on transactions by a dealer within one year after the last date upon which the security was bona fide offered to the public; the solicitation of orders, and clarifies and broadens the language of the act with respect to the exchange of securities with existing security holders and the exemption of securities issued pursuant to a plan of reorganization, readjustment or liquidation of any person in receivership or in bankruptcy, or in foreclosure proceedings, or under the supervision of State officials.

Favors Liability Limit.

Civil liability for statements contained in the registration statement would be limited under the fourth amendment proposed. The amendment proposes that these liabilities be modified by requiring that the plaintiff show reliance on the registration statement or prospectus; that damages be only those caused by the untrue statement or omission; that the omissions from which liability may arise be limited; that liability of underwriters be limited to purchasers who buy from them or in reliance on their name, that recission actions be permitted only against issuers and in certain cases underwriters; that the fiduciary standard be eliminated; that a provision be included making reliance on statements by competent officers, experts, &c., a reasonable ground for belief, and that the provisions as to the amount of damages and as to contribution be clarified.

The fifth amendment seeks to amend Section 12 and limit liability under paragraph (1) of that section to one who "wilfully" sells a security in violation of Section 5. It also clarifies the liability of an agent, and places upon the purchaser a duty to use reasonable care in the purchase of securities in reliance upon a prospectus or oral communication. Damages are to be those caused by such violation or by untrue statements in the prospectus and in no case are to exceed the amount by which the consideration paid by the person suing is greater than the consideration received by the person suing.

Statute of Limitations.

By amendment six it is proposed to shorten the period during which actions may be brought to six months after discovery of the untrue statement, or after such discovery should have been made by the exercise of reasonable diligence, or, if the action is to enforce a liability created under section 12 (1), unless brought within six months after the violation upon which it is based. The period provided for in the act is two years. The maximum limit within which suit may be brought under section 11 or section 12 (1) is to be shortened from ten to six years after the security was bona fide offered to the public, or under section 12 (2) after the date of the sale.

Amendment seven relates to the liability of controlled persons and is intended to afford some defense to the controlling person to show facts that would relieve him of liability if he had acted directly, and to limit liability to cases where, for the purpose of evading liability, he causes such controlled person to take any action which renders such controlled person liable.

Amendment 8 is intended to limit the liability under section 17 to criminal liability for an intentional violation of its provisions "wilfully and with intent to deceive." It also clarifies the provision relating to so-called tipster sheets.

Clarifies Jurisdiction.

The ninth amendment would eliminate the concurrent jurisdiction of the State and Territorial courts with the Federal courts over offenses and violations under the act, and would also eliminate the provision of the act which makes impossible the removal of a suit from a State court to any court of the United States. The committee believes that multiple jurisdiction, because of the ambiguity of many provisions, will inevitably result in varied interpretations of the act, and in view of the heavy liability the resulting uncertainty will almost certainly operate as a detriment to legitimate business.

Amendment 10 would modify the terms of section 24, to conform to the changes suggested in other sections.

The eleventh amendment would add a discretionary power in the courts to assess actual costs on an unsuccessful plaintiff, which is common in English practice, and would tend to eliminate suits brought in connection with corporate and financial transactions based more on their nuisance value than on the actual merits of the suit.

Amendment 12 would limit the liability imposed on protective committees, reorganization committees, issuers of certificates of deposit and similar securities.

Data Simplification Urged.

The thirteenth amendment relates to schedule A which lists the formation required in the registration statement and regulations of the Federal Trade Commission in regard thereto. The committee believes that the information required should be simplified, because at present so much information is required that no ordinary investor could hope to assimilate it and much of it has little bearing on the soundness of the security. The cost of preparing it is a heavy burden on any corporation. The accounting requirements also should be modified and simplified.

The fourteenth amendment relates chiefly to foreign securities which are dealt with under the act in substantially the same way as domestic securities. The committee doubts whether this is desirable because as the act stands at present it is practically a complete bar to any isue of securities of foreign corporations.

The committee points out that these amendments are far from complete, and there are many other problems which require further consideration.

Victim Supplies Bandit Pair With All They Needed

Annapolis, Md., March 25 (Spl.). A pair of robbers yesterday used accoutrements of their victim in rendering him helpless, making good their escape and supplying themselves not only with the luxuries but also the necessities of life.

After blackjacking Joseph J. Jacobs, 60, of Jones Station, 10 miles from here, and robbing him of $1,650 in bonds, checks and jewelry, the two escaped in Jacobs' expensive automobile. As a safeguard against hunger, they also emptied an electric refrigerator, the viands including Maryland style fried chicken.

Jacobs told Deputy Sheriff James J. Blackwell the two men jumped through a window and pounced on him in his bed. He was rendered senseless by a blow on the head. Using Jacobs' sheets and belt, his assailants trussed him up, collected their booty and fled.

Jacobs, president of the Creston Park Realty Co., was not hurt seriously.

Snake Killers to Compete.

Luke, Md., March 25 (Spl.).—Cold Spring Rod and Gun Club will sponsor a snake killing contest in an effort to reduce the number of snakes along Savage river and thereby protect the trout in the river.

Culpeper Fathers Dine Farm Sons

Banquet Thursday Will Honor 40 "Juniors."

Culpeper, Va., March 25 (Spl.).—The F. F. A. Club of the Culpeper High School, with a membership of 40 young farmers of the agricultural class, of which Prof. Robert R. Tolbert is instructor, will hold a "father and son banquet" Thursday, it was announced today.

The committee for banquet arrangements includes Billy Smith, Powell Button and H. N. Hutcherson; for programs, Lucian Bruce, Stuart Lindsay and Robert Inskeep. Officers of the club are J. B. Carpenter, jr., president; H. N. Hutcherson, vice president; D. James Coleman, jr., secretary; Billy Smith, treasurer, and James Butler, reporter.

Hanover Schools Hold Classes on Saturdays

Hanover Courthouse, Va., March 25 (Spl.).—Hanover County public schools, in which classes were held yesterday, will be open two more Saturdays, on April 7 and 26, to make up for time lost during the recent snow, J. Wilton Hall, county school superintendent, has announced.

Good Friday also will be a school day. Easter Monday will be observed as the only holiday.

"Mad Dog" Scare Leads To Police Killing Order

South Boston, Va., March 25 (Spl.).—Because a dog recently went on the war path here and bit three persons, an order has been issued by the town council to shoot all dogs not muzzled.

Ten dogs already have been killed. The council feared that mad dogs might be at large.

321 Specialists, Stock Bill Foes, Invite Scrutiny

Say Redraft Perils Credit and Ask Committee Study Their Work.

(Associated Press.)

The specialists' committee of the New York Stock Exchange yesterday invited the House Commerce Committee to observe their work on the exchange floor before acting on the revised stock market control bill, which, it said, would mean the practical elimination of 321 specialists now operating.

The specialists, the committee said, constitute "an indispensable factor in assuring the liquidity of investments, and, in turn, the liquidity of commercial banks and other financial institutions throughout the country."

Contrary to common belief, it continued, the specialist can not act adversely to the interests of the regular brokers and their customers, and is barred from trading for his own account while holding a market order.

The committee said: "No business is more carefully supervised, and there are no penalties in any other business more drastic than those meted out to a specialist if he violates the law of the exchange * * * or indulges in any practice inconsistent with just and equitable principles of trade."

The last of Congressional hearings on the Fletcher-Rayburn bill to provide strong governmetnal control over the securities markets will be held this week when Richard Whitney, president of the New York Stock Exchange, submits to the Senate Banking Committee a list of amendments which his organization wants incorporated into the measure.

Stanley to Open New High School Today

Luray, Va., March 25 (Spl.).—Between 400 and 500 children who have been attending school in different rooms in Stanley, near here, since September, 1933, tomorrow will move into the new high school.

The children have been quartered in vacant stores and the basement of the Farmers & Merc[illegible] National Bank while the $41,000 high school building was being constructed.

Board Boosts U. S. Bond Use To Back Notes

Reserve Meets Shrinkage of Commercial Paper Deemd Eligible.

(Associated Press.)

A tremendous shrinkage of eligible commercial paper was said yesterday by the Federal Reserve Board to be forcing the use of "a considerable volume" of Government securities to back Federal Reserve notes.

In its monthly bulletin on conditions, the board said that at the end of February "total holdings by the Reserve banks of bills bought and discounted were $127,000,000, the lowest figure since the war." It added:

"In view of the small amount of eligible paper, the Reserve banks were obliged to continue pledging a considerable volume of United States Government obligations against outstanding Federal Reserve notes."

Since the date mentioned by the board, Reserve bank holdings of commercial paper have continued to shrink. March 21 they were $84,000,000, indicating a still greater employment of Government securities as backing for Reserve notes.

Note Circulation Low.

This condition was not interpreted as indicating any shortage of ready currency. Gold certificate holdings of the Reserve banks—now at a record figure of $4,270,695,000—were sufficient to support a Reserve note circulation exceeding $7,000,000,000 after allowing for the 35 per cent gold certificate backing required on deposits.

Actual Reserve note circulation is $2,964,943,000, or far short of the potential issue. If only commercial paper were available for pledging this currency, it would require the use of a much greater portion of the gold certificate reserves than the 40 per cent minimum backing demanded by law. Commercial paper may be pledged up to 60 per cent of the outstanding notes.

But to prevent tying up so much of the gold reserves, Congress since February, 1932, has allowed the substitution of Government bonds for commercial paper. March 6, at the reserve board's request, this practice was extended for another year with the President empowered to extend it an additional two years.

Industry Output Gains.

The present total of all money in circulation exceeds $5,000,000,000, making reserve notes the largest single type of currency used.

The board said that during the first two months of 1934, "the volume of industrial output increased by considerably more than the usual seasonal amount." It continued:

"In general, output of durable manufactures such as steel, automobiles and lumber showed a larger increase in comparison with the early months of 1933 than did output of less durable manufactures such as textiles and leather products.

"Activity at automobile factories showed a rapid growth during this period and in February there was a substantial increase in activity in the steel industry. Preliminary reports indicate that employment at factories, after declining seasonally between the middle of December and the middle of January, increased by a considerable amount in February."

White House Invader Remains at Gallinger

Famed overnight as one of the few to "crash" the White House gate, Harry A. Yoder, 27, remained in the observation ward at Gallinger Hospital last night, pondering on his frustrated attempt to interview President Roosevelt.

Hospital attaches said he sat alone throughout yesterday. No one came to see him and he asked to see no one. Meanwhile, authorities are attempting to locate relatives in his home town—Limekiln, Pa.

Twenty-one men and two women will take part. Mrs. Maud Howell Smith will play the role of Mrs. Hawkins, mother of the little hero, Jim Hawkins, to be played by Andrew Dent, a student at Central.

3,000 Hungry Bandits Terrorize China Anew

Shanghai, March 25 (AP).—Gen. Liu Kwei-tang's tattered soldier-bandits from Chahar Province, who threatened the city of Peiping last December, were reported today to have taken the warpath again in search of food.

After two months of plundering in the valley of the Yellow River, 3,000 of these brigands were threatening the Shanghai-Peiping Railway zone in southern Shantung Province, causing railway authorities to cut off night service.

New 17-Foot Mirror to Speed Photos, Not to Cast Images

Giant Reflector Will Catch 10 Times More Light From Stars.

By Howard W. Blakeslee.
(Associated Press Science Editor.)

High speed photography, instead of immense images, will be the secret of the power of the 200-inch telescope to see four times farther, and peer into a volume of space of 30 times that now visible.

The 200-inch mirror will take celestial photographs 10 times faster than previous telescopes. That speed, contrary to popular view, is how astronomers expect to use the great mirror to solve new mysteries of creation.

The mirror will be 17 feet in diameter, but it will not form 17-foot images of stars. It will collect four times more light than the present largest, the 100-inch telescope on Mount Wilson. Much of that light comes from far regions never yet seen.

"More light" is the objective of the great telescope. "More light" includes rays never visible to the eye, both ultra-violet and infra-red. But these rays, like the visible register on photographic plates, are "visible" to photo-electric "eyes," and when passed through a prism show on the spectrum the sort of atoms which give rise to each ray.

Even Heat Will Register.

Even the heat of stars reflects the same as light, in four-fold greater volume, from the great mirror, and is made to tell its story.

To "see" through the great telescope you would take an elevator to the top of a giant frame which resembles a gargantuan cannon. Its "barrel" is not solid, but a spidery framework of metal beams, like the skeleton of a tower.

Your elevator stops about 55 feet up, at the upper rim. It is 24 feet from where you stand to the opposite rim. And 12 feet away, midway between you and the opposite side, the rays from the great mirror below meet at a focus. At that point they form the magnified images of the stars, planets and nebulae.

There are three ways of getting this image to your eye. One is a system of mirrors to reflect them from the middle of the telescope to the rim where you stand. You place a small magnifying glass on this image, adjust it to fit your eye, and see the strange shapes of things unbelievably far away.

Another way allows for climbing into the focus itself. This will permit specially precise photographic work. The third will reflect the image back down the center of the tube and through a hole in the center of the mirror bigger than a washtub. For this doubling-back trick a 60-inch mirror will be used near the top of the telescope to send down the light from the great mirror.

Chamber of Photography.

This focus just beneath the 200-inch mirror is used for spectroscopic photographs requiring hours of exposure. At the base of the telescope it will be possible to take such pictures in a constant temperature chamber.

If you look at the star field focussed at the top of the telescope only a small round patch of stars in the center of your object glass will be distinct. Those all around it will be shaped like arrows, all pointing inward toward the clear, middle field.

But within that small central field there will appear faint stars and other more spectacular objects which never could be seen with a smaller telescope.

There the photographic plates will catch the light of the universes of stars so distant that their rays started earthward about 1,200,000,000 years ago.

Correcting lenses it will will be possible to take stars sharply defined all over the photographic plate 17 inches in-diameter.

To get these photographs in one hour, instead of ten is not merely a great saver of time. In long exposures the changing condition of the air itself may mar or ruin the images sought.

Giant Mirror May Solve Two Big Problems

Dr. Edwin Hubble Sees Possibility of New Expansion Study.

"Riding" the 100-inch telescope at Mount Wilson, Edwin Hubble, of the Carnegie Institution, has seen and reported in depths of space celestial objects which have caused his name to be quoted throughout the scientific world. Here he answer a question "What would you like to do with a 200-inch telescope?"

By Edwin Hubble.

Pasadena, Calif., March 25 (AP).—We can not know what new paths of research the 200-inch telescope may open, but we can start with two major problems concerning nebulae and keep alert for possibilities.

Red-shifts in the spectra of nebulae increase with distance and the 200-inch should penetrate to regions where red-shifts are so great that their indirect effects can be studied with confidence. (Red-shift is astronomical language for the evidence seen in the 100-inch that the universe is expanding.)

For instance, we should be able to determine, from the effects on apparent luminosities of nebulae, whether or not the red-shifts represent actual motion—whether the universe really is expanding. Moreover, we can determine the rate at which red-shifts increase with distance through a much greater range than is now possible and we can tell within that range whether the rate is constant or whether it increases or decreases. These are vital questions bearing on the structure of space.

Also the 200-inch should reveal the brighter stars in many of the nearest cluster of nebulae, the Virgo cluster—and hence enable us to determine the distance of this sample collection of several hundred nebulae. With the distance reliably determined we can derive the general characteristics of the sample collection which can in turn be applied to the fainter nebulae whose distances are unknown or doubtful.

Cheap Refrigerators Developed for TVA

David E. Lilienthal, president of the Electric Home and Farm Authority, said yesterday that electric refrigerators were being developed by private manufacturers for sale in the Tennessee Valley market at between $70 and $80, compared with present prices around $115, according to the Associated Press.

One manufacturer, he said, has produced a combination range and refrigerator, and others are working on advanced designs.

College Lends Ford A McGuffey Original

Washington, Pa., March 25 (AP).—The 100-year-old Hebrew grammar copied laboriously by hand by William Holmes McGuffey, who taught a generation of Americans to read, is being loaned to Henry Ford by Washington and Jefferson College as a gesture of appreciation.

The action was taken today after the automobile manufacturer gave the college a set of perfect copies of the six original readers of which the noted educator was the author.

Einstein Speaks On "Humanity"

German Manuscript Is Translated by Rabbi.

Newark, N. J., March 25 (AP).—Dr. Albert Einstein, the eminent scientist, stood before thousands of persons in a vast, flag-festooned hall today and spoke of "humanity, justice and tolerance."

An exile from his German fatherland, he is continuing his researches at Princeton. He was guest of honor at a reception and concert in Newark Armory. Gov. A. Harry Moore acted as master of ceremonies.

Dr. Einstein read from a prepared manuscript in German, which afterward was translated by Rabbi Julius Silberfeld, of Newark.

Actress Drops Suit, Her Hospital Bill Paid

Los Angeles, March 25 (AP).—The suit of Mae Clarke, scren actress, against Phillips Holmes, actor, for $21,500 damages as the result of an automobile accident in which Miss Clarke was injured has been dismissed. Holmes, court orders disclosed, agreed to pay the actress' hospital bills.

Miss Clarke was riding with Holmes in his automobile when it struck a tree. She suffered a broken jaw.

7,500 See Work Done.

Three ladles were used, each working from a separate door to separate doors on the mold. The ladles were red-hot after each trip and were plunged into water.

A fenced-off section of the furnace room floor, the orchestra section of the strange theater, held the audience of scientists. Above it was a balcony for newsmen and photographers while still higher was a gallery for spectators.

Every 15 minutes throughout the day the gallery audience changed. Officials of the Corning Glass Works estimated that 7,500 persons witnessed the pouring.

Today's pouring of the "eye" was the result of two years of research and experimentation with smaller mirrors of the same chemical composition.

The task of Dr. John C. Hostetter, director of research at the glass works and his physicist, Dr. George V. McCauley, was to produce a glass with the minimum of atmospheric expansion.

Their tests, requiring two years, were proved by the successful forming of a smaller mirror, 120 inches in diameter. It was completed months ago, hardening in five months. It was on exhibition today.

3 Years to Grind Surface.

Gradually during the next ten months the huge mirror poured today will cool in a heat-controlled annealing box. The mirror then will be shipped to California, where it will be ground to give it a concave surface. That will require three years.

Some time in 1938 it is anticipated the mirror will be affixed to a telescope on an undesignated mountain of southern California. Man then will be ready to inspect more closely the valleys of the moon and the canals of Mars.

In the front row of scientists, leaning on the face, a slouched hat pulled down over his eyes, was Dr. Walter D. Adams, director of the Mount Wilson Observatory at Pasadena, Calif. He will have charge of the grinding. The Mount Wilson reflector, 100 inches in diameter, now is the largest in the world.

Among the others famous in scientific circles who attended the pouring were Sir William Bragg, of Great Britain, exchange professor at Cornell; Lyman J. Briggs, director of the United States Bureau of Rockefeller Foundation; Dr. C. A. Chant, director of the Dunlop Observatory, Toronto; Dr. Arthur L. Day, director of Geophysical Laboratories, Carnegie Institution, Washington, and A. E. Marshall, president of the American Society of Chemical Engineers.

17 Feet in Diameter.

Marshall commended the precision with which the workmen manipulated the ladles. Wilson, directing the ladling operations, and the worker exposed to the greatest heat because he was nearest the dipper, was protected by an asbestos apron and wooden shield, held in place in front of his face by a mouthpiece clenched in his teeth.

The attempt to produce the 17-foot mirror, which will be 26 inches thick, began five years ago when the International Education Board, of Washington, gave the astronomers $6,000,000. Three years of experimentation with fused quartz were unsuccessful and the job was brought to Corning.

"It is an amazing thing that this first and most important operation has been so successful," said Dr. Adams. "The making of the mirror is the greatest piece of scientific work ever undertaken."

Gang Attacks Woman Escapes With Purse

A gang of colored youths attacked Mrs. Edna Turner, of 1026 Nineteenth street northwest, as she walked near Twenty-first and L streets yesterday, and, after pushing her about the sidewalk, snatched her purse and fled.

Mrs. Turner told police the pocketbook contained $9 and valuable papers. She said members of the gang ranged in age from 12 to 14 years.

Virginia Light Expert Visions Greater Field

Dr. S. A. Mitchell Feels 200-Inch Mirror to Reveal New Spectra.

The spectroscope, which turns the rainbow into thousands of banded lines on a photographic plate, has given astronomers more details about what stars are made of than any other instrument. One of the leading spectroscopic experts is Dr. S. A. Mitchell, director of Leander McCormick Observatory, of the University of Virginia.

By S. A. Mitchell.

University, Va., March 25 (AP).—If I were an observer with a 200-inch telescope my own personal interests would be confined pretty largely to a spectroscopic program. The great increase in light-gathering power over telescopic apertures now available will permit a decrease of exposure times with present spectrographs or the use of new spectrographs with increased dispersion.

With the new process of coating glass mirrors with aluminum instead of silver it will be possible to photograph farther into the ultra-violet, and with increased dispersion the spectra of bright stars can be photographed on a large scale from which may be obtained accurate wave-lengths, intensities and micrometer tracings of line contours.

The intensities depend primarily on the number of atoms involved. The stars are laboratories where very high temperatures and minute pressures are found. The grouping of spectral lines into multiplets with known excitation potentials measured in volts and the detailed investigation of solar and stellar spectra have added enormously to knowledge concerning the chemical atom.

The increased light-gathering power will permit both an increase in accuracy in the determination of spectroscopic parallaxes, or distances, and also the extension of the program to fainter stars.

Finally it will be possible to investigate motions in the line of sight of very distant nebulae which have played such an important role in ideas regarding the expanding universe.

Mother, Baby Saved in Fire

A mother and her 10-day-old baby were rescued with several occupants of an apartment house at 1205 Fifth street northwest yesterday when a basement fire routed residents and filled the building with smoke.

Clad in night clothes and carrying her infant son, Mrs. Ida Weiman, 23, was escorted safely to the street by firemen. They were taken to Sibley Hospital. Physicians treated them for exposure, but said they were not affected seriously.

The woman's husband, Frank Weiman, 25, and his brother and sister, John, 17, and Dorothy, 27, also were taken from the building. Miss Weiman was carried down a fire ladder from their second floor apartment.

Several other apartment occupants hurried to the street in night clothing. They were taken in by neighbors.

Corn Judging Contest Set at Harrisonburg

Harrisonburg, Va., March 25 (Spl.).—The annual Rockingham-Augusta corn judging contest will be held here Thursday, with boys and girls from all sections of the two counties competing.

Weyers Cave High School, of Augusta County, is the defending champion, having won the trophy last year.

Farm Demonstration Set.

Luray, Va., March 25 (Spl.).—The Department of Agriculture will send an agent to Page County early in April to give instructions as to the proper way to prepare garden soil and the amount of seed to be placed in certain plots of ground. Warfare against pests and the proper cultivation of garden seeds will also be furnished.

'Daddy' Loses

Bishop Grace Mystified by Loss of Valuables.

Bishop Charles Manuel Grace—revered as "Daddy Grace" by the Negro followers of his House of Prayer for All People—is missing diamond rings, money orders and several hundred dollars in currency, according to a report to District detectives by his chauffeur, Johnny Hero.

Police have been informed that the valuables, in a traveling bag, were stolen while the bishop was en route here from Brooklyn, where he was indicted a week ago under the Mann act. He is reported to have placed the jewelry and money in the bag, which was not opened until arrival here Saturday.

The bishop discovered the loss upon arrival at his residence at 601 M street northwest, and found that the rings, valued at $1,500, and 10 money orders and the cash were missing.

Russians Face Ice Peril; Air Rescue Rushed

Soviet Fliers Test Planes as U. S. Waives Visas for Refugees.

Nome, Alaska, March 25 (AP).—The peril of icefloes crept closer today to 89 Russians, marooned in the Arctic Ocean, as Soviet fliers hastily tested planes and prepared to fly to their rescue.

Stranded on the ice, 150 miles off Cape Onman, since February 13, after the sinking of the steamer Chelyuskin, the Russian scientific expedition to Wrangell Island faces the coming of spring, when ice floes break up and swirl away in the waters of the Arctic Ocean and Bering Sea, and icebergs melt and turn upside down, destroying everything in their path.

The three Soviet fliers, Prof. George Yushakoff and Pilots F. A. Levanevsky and M. T. Sletneff, tested two planes of the Pacific Alaska Airways in Fairbanks, before buying them for the flight to Nome and the dash over the Arctic Ocean.

The Soviet government and the United States Commissioner of Immigration arranged to land the Russians on American soil without formality, if they could be rescued. The State Department waived visa requirements.

Weeks ago the women and children of the shipwrecked party, which was en route to Wrangell Island, were rescued by a Soviet flier who landed near the ice floes between Siberia and Alaska. The men were left to endure the hardships as best they might, they had food supplies cached in the ice.

The Soviet government colonized Wrangell Island, and since then many dramatic rescues have been made by plane in the north. The party now marooned in the Arctic Ocean has been in danger several times, because splitting of the ice floes wrecked their houses and threatened to separate the men.

Wilson Funeral Rites Are Today

Burial Plans Await Later Decision.

Funeral services for Mrs. Harley P. Wilson, who died Friday morning at her home, Hollin Hall, near Alexandria, will be held at 11 a. m. today at Grace Episcopal Church, Alexandria.

The body will be placed in the crypt of the Abbey Mausoleum near Arlington until burial arrangements are made.

Pallbearers will be Z. Ord Preston, Dr. William McClellan, Edward D. Merrill, Maj. Davis B. Wills, Percival F. Ridsdale, George Bean, William F. Ham, Julius Garfinckel and Judge Louis C. Barley, all of Washington, and Gerrard Glenn, of the University of Virginia.

De Valera and Foes Hurl "Dictatorship" Charges

Dublin, Irish Free State, March 25 (AP).—President Eamon de Valera is charging his Blueshirt opponents with an attempt to establish an Irish dictatorship while his foes, seizing on his move to abolish the Senate, are flinging back the same charge of the President.

Political observers doubt whether either side seriously believes there is danger of a dictatorship, but it is considered good propaganda in view of the expected general election this summer.

Longshore Mediation To Start Tomorrow

San Francisco, March 25 (AP).—Dr. Henry F. Grady, chairman of President Roosevelt's Board of Mediation, announced today that hearings would start Tuesday on the labor dispute between the International Longshoremen's Association and Pacific Coast shipping companies.

Grady, who is regional chairman of the National Labor Board here, said he expected to receive further instructions from the White House tomorrow.

Private Liquor Sales Prohibited by State

Seattle, March 25 (AP).—Washington began its second era of prohibition today as the new State liquor law clamped down the lid on private sale of "hard stuff."

The Steele bill, creating a State monopoly of hard liquor and fortified wine dispensing, became effective last midnight.

Closer Check On New Stars Now Foreseen

Dr. Charles P. Oliver Is Convinced Details to Be Revealed.

American meteor observation is largely under supervision of Dr. Charles P. Oliver, director, Flower Astronomical Observatory, University of Pennsylvania, who here answers the question what he would like to do with a 200-inch telescope.

By Dr. Charles P. Oliver.

Philadelphia, March 25 (AP).—Work that impresses me as important is the photographing of spectra of faint objects, both nebulae and stars.

Especially novae, or so-called new stars, could have their spectra followed to considerably fainter limits. With present instruments the time necessary to obtain measurable spectra of very faint bodies is great if not prohibitive.

Next in importance would be photographic nebulae, either singly to secure the maximum of faint detail (particularly the light changes of variable stars within their limits) or in groups in certain regions of the sky to study their size, brightness and distribution.

Additional information would also be obtainable in regard to members of our solar system. For example, comets could be followed to much greater distances from the sun and more learned of their behavior in these unstudied regions of their orbits. Further, better spectra of their parts could be secured.

It will be possible also to photograph the faint satellites of some of the planets, and follow occasionally a few of the asteroids of outstanding importance, such as the two very faint ones discovered last year, which come respectively near and within the earth's orbit.

Finally better spectra could be secured of the outer planets and possibly of those brighter asteroids which need study. These are some of the obvious problems to which such an instrument as the 200-inch could at once be applied.

"Braintruster" Revolt Probe Asked by Writ

Gary Educator Ready to Name Official Who Talked Treason.

Sam Rayburn, Texas Democrat.

"I don't intend," he said, "to be used as a smoke screen to single out any one or two of these so-called intellectual radicals to take the blame for the whole program."

Wirt said he believed any investigation of his charges should be made by a committee charged especially with that duty.

The educator said he was convinced that the next two months would determine the entire fate of the Administration's "new deal" program.

"By the end of that time it will be obvious," he said, "whether the program will become permanent or whether it shall be abandoned."

Wirt said that he didn't mind "being made the goat in this affair, if it is necessary to have a goat," to stop parts of the program he regarded as dangerous from becoming permanent.

Wirt Charge Called "Cocktail Talk"

"Cocktail talk" was the description applied yesterday by one of the leaders of the Administration's "brain trust" to allegations of Dr. William A. Wirt that a group of radical advisers is using President Roosevelt as the "Kerensky" of an American Red revolution.

But Congressmen whose former prerogatives have been flouted by members of this same "brain trust" were inclined to take seriously the Indiana educator's charges, and movements for an immediate investigation gained headway in both houses.

Representative Alfred L. Bulwinkle (Democrat), North Carolina, said last night he will introduce in the House today, provided the Rules Committee concurs, a resolution calling for an inquiry by a special committee into Dr. Wirt's allegations.

The committee, if the House takes favorable action, which seemed indicated last night, will summon Dr. Wirt to Washington and call upon him for the name of his alleged informant, and for the names of those accused of Communistic boring from within.

Senate to Act, Too.

Senator Arthur Robinson (Republican), Indiana, will press for a similar Senate investigation if the House fails to act.

Meanwhile, there was a deal of speculation on the Hill and throughout the Government departments as to whom Dr. Wirt meant.

One of the younger "brain trusters" frequently under fire, said, laughingly, yesterday that the Gary educator's "plot" allegations "sounded like something you are likely to hear at a cocktail party."

This "brain truster" said he was sure Dr. Wirt couldn't have been referring to him, adding it was "ridiculous to suggest any one could be using the President as suggested in the Wirt letter."

An attempted round-up of the more obvious "brain trusters" to see if any had knowledge of Dr. Wirt's sources of information revealed many of them had left Washington recently for distant parts. One was reported sailing for Italy, another in the Virgin Islands, a third in the far West. Those available unanimously declared Dr. Wirt "can't have meant me."

Julian, Fugitive Oil Promoter, Broke at Death

Millions Gone, Suicide in China to Be Buried by Friends.

Shanghai, March 25 (AP).—Penniless at death and a fugitive from American justice, C. C. Julian, one-time millionaire oil operator, of Oklahoma and California, who took poison today in a fashionable Shanghai Hotel, is to be buried by his friends.

The undertaker revealed that Julian, who once handled millions, was without funds, and others claimed he was thousands of dollars in debt.

A small group of Julian's admirers scoffed at suicide reports and said they believed he had accidently killed himself.

Julian's dinner companion, Leonora Levy, his confidante and secretary, also attempted to kill herself, physicians said. She took the same potion that killed Julian, but regained consciousness today long enough to reveal that Julian told her he intended to kill himself.

"Julian said he would do it," she whispered to hospital attendants. "I did not believe him, but he did it. He was a brave man."

Miss Levy was the last person to talk with Julian. Deserting a table littered with champagne glasses Julian shortly after midnight went to his room.

Miss Levy waited for him until she became frightened. Going to the room, she found him unconscious and called hotel officials. Julian was taken to a hospital where he died at 6 a. m.

Miss Levy then returned to the hotel and took poison. Doctors said today she was in a dangerous condition, but probably would recover.

British authorities of the international settlement will hold an inquest tomorrow. Julian came to Shanghai a year ago in default of $25,000 bail in Oklahoma, where he was charged with mail fraud in connection with oil promotion.

Fraud Case Ends

Courtney C. Julian, sought on mail fraud charges in connection with oil promotions, died yesterday in Shanghai of poison, allegedly self-administered.

Julian Suicide Recalls Crash In Oil Deals

Millions Lost in Fall of Oklahoma Firm After Flight.

Oklahoma City, March 25 (AP). The suicide in Shanghai of 51-year-old Courtney C. Julian, master mind of vast oil promotions, wrote the epilogue to one of the Nation's most sensational mail fraud cases.

The Government charges the C. C. Julian Oil & Royalties Co. was a $3,500,000 bubble that burst with losses to some 15,000 persons led to put their money in its stock by promises of oil riches.

The Julian fiasco is one of a series of mail fraud cases intertwined with the oil history of the Southwest.

The debonair Julian made and lost vast fortunes. His first was in real estate of his native Canada. He went to Los Angeles and organized the Julian Petroleum Co. Just before it crashed he stepped out. Thousands of investors lost money and several of the promoters went to prison.

Julian reached Oklahoma in the oil boom of 1929. He soon was in a palatial office, spent money freely and owned an airplane. His oil and royalties company was selling stock throughout the country.

Miss Marjorie Bennett, a California stockholder, asked receivership in 1932, alleging dissipation of company funds and "riotous living," but she dropped the petition when Julian stepped out, and Charles W. Mason, former Oklahoma Supreme Court chief justice, was named trustee. Miss Bennett later renewed her petition.

A grandy jury then returned mail fraud indictments. Several of the defendants were given suspended sentences. Charges were dismissed against Mason and several others. The Government is collecting from bondsmen, who put up $25,000 for Julian's appearance.

Church Eulogizes Rev. Washington

Memorial Services Held by Zion Baptists.

Memorial services for the Rev. William L. Washington, for seven years pastor of the Zion Baptist Church, were held yesterday in the church auditorium, the principal address being made by the Rev. J. L. S. Holloman, pastor of the Second Baptist Church.

Tribute was paid to the Rev. Mr. Washington's social service work in the Southwest section, his work in public schools, on playgrounds, and as pastor of the Pilgrim Baptist Church. A eulogy on behalf of the congregation was read by William G. Opey. Brief tributes were paid by representatives of church auxiliaries. The Rev. John M. Ellison, pastor of the church, presided.

Calculating Numbers Plus Imponderables.

Mr. George S. Hellman, well-known to lovers of literature and art, aptly declares the gist of bidding is based on the proposition that "every bid is a bet, the odds of which are determined by the relation of hands to the score and the players." Recently he was a helpless victim of the most excellent principle which he so aptly stated. The lesson was administered to him by Mr. Clarence W. Watson, former United States Senator from West Virginia, who certainly in his time in the Senate was the best Bridge player in that august body, and is one of the best and keenest anywhere.

The players were using the Whist Club System, and the bidding went as follows: (Figures after bids refer to numbered explanatory paragraphs.)

South	West	North	East
1♣(1)	Pass	2◇(2)	4♣(3)
6◇(4)	7♣(5)	Dbl.	Pass
7◇(6)	Pass	Pass	Pass

1—According to the Whist Club System, South's bid of one club showed a minimum of 3½ quick-tricks.

2—Had North responded with one diamond, it would have meant that the hand contained less than two quick-tricks. Hence when he bid two diamonds this disclosed not only a diamond suit but at least two quick-tricks in the hand.

3—An effort to prevent opponents from reaching a Slam and to suggest a possible paying sacrifice in case they do so.

4—This bidding is based on the process of elimination. Obviously, partner must hold at least two Aces or the Ace-King of spades, and at least five diamonds to the Queen.

5—Mr. Hellman calculated that North and South would score at least 1570 points. If East and West should make but 8 tricks their loss would be only 1,000 points. Opposing this there was a possibility of pushing the adversaries to a successful Grand Slam, but this was counterbalanced by the better expectation of being doubled, and in addition there was the possibility that the opponents might not be able to make a Grand Slam. Based upon these considerations, Mr. Hellman offered his "bet" on terms that did not appear too disadvantageous for him.

6—A very brilliant bid. A penalty of at least 1000 points was practically assured, and unless partner held the spade King, the trumps broke and the opponents secured no ruffs, the Grand Slam might be down one trick, a loss of 1100 points. Against this, however, was a probable gain of 2250 points for the Grand Slam, plus 700 points for the rubber and 140 points as a game score. It was a question of calculating the imponderables. Mr. Watson knew his partner to be fairly precise in his bidding. He would not have doubled seven clubs if he held nothing in addition to the two tricks already shown. Mr. Watson therefore declined Mr. Hellman's odds and in turn made another "bet," a Grand Slam in diamonds bid and made.

It is obvious that the Grand Slam could have been reached more simply by use of the Culbertson System, as follows:

South	West	North	East
1♠	Pass	3◇	4♣
4NT	Pass	5NT	6♣
7◇	Pass	Pass	Pass

The Forcing Takeout plus the Four-Five Notrump Convention accurately places the cards and suit lengths needed for the Grand Slam.

Mrs. Roosevelt To Be Heard At Arlington

Cedars of Lebanon to Be Planted as Gift of Holy Land.

An address by Mrs. Roosevelt will feature planting of a number of the famous cedars of Lebanon in Arlington National Cemetery Saturday, under auspices of the Near East Foundation. The stately trees are regarded as a gesture of friendship between the people of the Bible lands and the people of the United States.

Throughout the Near East these trees are thought of as symbols of "things that endure," and next to the giant redwoods of California, they are the oldest things on earth. Some of the cedars in the grove on the mountain the Arabs call "Dahr-el-Kodib" undoubtedly were there when the foresters of King Solomon and his friend, Hiram, King of Tyre, "cruised" the mountainside selecting trees to be cut down for the construction of the temple at Jerusalem.

The shipment of trees, consisting of one 10-foot specimen and 17 others, varying in size from 18 to 40 inches, arrived in New York March 21. After passing quarantine inspection, they were sent to Washington.

Twelve will be planted in a specially selected site at Arlington, and the remaining half dozen will go to a Government nursery, to be held in reserve to replace any of those in Arlington which fail to survive the journey and transplanting.

Mrs. Roosevelt will read a message from the President. The formal presentation of the trees will be made by Dr. Barclay Acheson, executive secretary of the Near East Foundation, and other officers of this organization. Appropriate Easter music will follow.

The program will be presented over the National Broadcasting Co.

Stott's Guffaw at President's Spill Started Him Up Ladder

Taft, Thrown Off Horse, Promoted Policeman Who Laughed.

Who was it who said all great men have their vices?

Be that as it may, the prize piece of Police Department lore hangs on the weakness of William Howard Taft for horseback riding.

It happened, veterans recalled, that the President owned a horse that was no respector of persons. Anyhow, Mr. Taft was unseated while exercising his favorite mount on the White House grounds.

Witnesses still tell of the dull report which reverberated through the neighborhood when the portly rider—for once thoroughly undignified—landed on his stomach.

Among the spectators was a young policeman, William G. Stott, with a laugh comparable in raucous tone to the voice of a champion hog caller. Unable to contain himself, Scott laughed heartily and long at the distinguished horseman.

So strident, in fact, was the policeman's roar that Mrs. Taft raised a window and inquired his name. Five minutes later a substitute arrived from a nearby precinct and Stott was informed his days on the White House detail were over.

A week or so later, however, Mr. Taft heard of the incident. He ordered Stott advanced to a lieutenancy.

Thus began the rise of the man appointed Saturday as a police inspector.

20 States Cut Auto Tag Fees

Many Shave Cost 50 Per Cent, but Gasoline Tax Still Is Stable.

Chicago, March 25 (AP).—In contrast to the mounting cost of living, motorists in many States are paying less this year for automobile licenses, a survey showed today.

More than 20 States have shaved their prices, several as much as 50 per cent. There are no indications, however, of reductions in gasoline taxes.

Oregon, where the gasoline tax originated, reduced its average license fee from $22 to $5 annually.

Kansas and Wyoming cut 50 per cent each, the former a year ago and the latter last December. Montana cut its average fee on light cars from $10 to $5. Nebraska sliced almost as deeply.

Minnesota made a 40 per cent cut, effective last year. Oklahoma's averaged 30 per cent, lowering the minimum from $8 to $2.50. Kentucky reduced the passenger license burden one-third and the truck fee one-fourth.

Michigan and Virginia cut the fee from 55 to 35 cents and from 70 to 40 cents a hundredweight, respectively.

North Dakota whittled 10 per cent. Idaho made it from $5 to $15 easier on owners of cars at least two years old. Iowa lowered its fee on 2-year-old cars.

Dillinger Gangsters Wait Trip to Chair

Plans for Dash to Prison Kept Secret.

Lima, Ohio, March 25 (AP).—Harry Pierpont, Charles Makley and Russell Clark, the pick of John Dillinger's gang, waited tonight in the county jail where Sheriff Jess L. Sarber was murdered last October, for what probably will be the last ride they will ever take—to the Ohio Penitentiary.

Pierpont and Makley were sentenced yesterday to die in the electric chair Friday, July 13. Clark will be sentenced to life imprisonment.

How and when the trip to Columbus will be made was held secret tonight by the new sheriff, Don Sarber, and Brig. Gen. Harold M. Bush, in charge of troops here.

Living Bacteria Found in Ancient Aztec Pyramids

Berkeley, Calif., March 25 (AP). Support for the theory bacteria can survive in a state of suspended animation for millions of years was announced today by Dr. Charles B. Lipman, professor of plant physiology of the University of California.

In soil taken from pre-Inca and pre-aztec pyramids, built 800 to 1,400 years ago, he said, were found living bacteria which had survived conditions not conducive to the maintenance of life. Soil kept in air-tight bottles 25 to 33 years also yielded large numbers of bacteria and certain types of single-celled plants known as blue and green algae.

The research is concerned with the death resistant nature of types of bacteria. A year ago Dr. Lipman announced discovery of bacteria in the interior meteorites which had come to earth.

Care was exercised in the testing of the soil from pyramids in Peru and Mexico. It was taken from positions in the ancient structures shielded from moisture and other supposed requisites of the bacteria life processes.

This tends to confirm his theory that bacteria found in the pre-cambrian material survived from the coal age to the present time.

Hundreds See Tercentenary Cross Service

Maryland Pioneers Are Honored at First Landing Place.

By Marion Butler.

St. Clements Island, Md., March 25.—Three thousand Marylanders came to this little island today to pay tribute to their pioneer ancestors who landed here one bleak March day 300 years ago.

The huge 40-foot tercentenary memorial cross was dedicated to the Maryland founders who landed here in the Ark and Dove and established the principle of religious freedom. It is a commemoration in stone of the wooden cross which Father Andrew White, Jesuit priest of the Ark who was also Maryland's first historian, erected here March 25, 1634, in celebration of the first mass said on Maryland shores.

Second Major Observance.

Its dedication marked the second major celebration of the tercentenary year, which began last November with the unveiling of a tablet at Cowes, England, where the Ark and Dove started their voyage.

Although the dedication ceremonies did not start until 2:30 p. m., by noon a large crowd already had gathered on Coltons Point, tiny Potomac River oystermen's hamlet. A fleet of 20 Maryland Conservation Corps boats and a few private yachts served as ferries.

Gov. Ritchie Speaks.

Shortly after 2 p. m. the white flagship, Governor McLane, of the Maryland Conservation fleet, steamed up the Potomac and anchored off the island. Aboard her was Gov. Ritchie, principal speaker at the ceremonies; State Comptroller William S. Gordy; State Treasurer J. M. Dennis and 12 members of the Maryland Tercentenary Commission.

Gov. Ritchie and his party were escorted to a platform beside the cross by marines bearing the National Standard and the Maryland flag.

R. Bennett Darnall, chairman of the tercentenary executive committee, called the gathering. Clad in the robes of the Jesuit order, the Right Rev. Edward Phillips, S. J., Provincial, of Fordham, N. Y., said the invocation which opened the ceremonies, and 200 St. Marys County school children sang "Maryland, My Maryland."

State Senator J. Allan Coad, chairman of the St. Marys County tercentenary committee, welcomed Marylanders to the historic ground and introduced T. Scott Offutt, of the tercentenary commission, who presented the cross to the State in the name of the commission.

The cross was received in behalf of the State by Gov. Ritchie, who said: "It is an inspiration to stand on this historic St. Clements Island."

Hardships Are Recalled.

He recalled the hardships which Maryland's founders surmounted before winning this place in the New World.

The "Star-Spangled Banner" was sung in closing. Benediction was pronounced by the Rev. Edward Edwin Niver, substituting for the Right Rev. Edward T. Helfenstein, D. D., bishop of the Episcopal Diocese of Easton.

Grouped around the cross at the ceremonies were members of the inscription committee which framed the wording of the bronze marker affixed to the cross and immortalizing Maryland's founders: Judge Offutt, chairman; the Rev. Joseph J. Ayd; the Rev. Dr. James M. Magruder; Mrs. Frank Herrigan; Miss Elizabeth Chew Williams; W. Hampton Magruder and Dr. Matthew Page Andrews.

Attending from Washington were William P. Cole, jr., and T. A. Goldsborough, members of Congress from Maryland. The Maryland State Society of Washington was represented by its vice president, R. G. Merritt, and son.

Harrisonburg to Be Host April 4 and 5.

Harrisonburg, Va., March 25 (Spl.).—The fifty-eighth annual session of the Augusta Baptist Association will be held here April 4 and 5, with Dr. E. B. Jackson as the host pastor. This association, which embraces the valley and adjacent areas, was constituted in 1876. It has met here only three times previously.

Speakers will include Dr. George T. Waite, of Richmond, secretary of State missions; Dr. E. T. Campbell, Lynchburg; Dr. John E. White, of the Virginia Baptist Hospital; R. F. Hough, of the Salem Orphanage; the Rev. H. Lee Scott, of Waynesboro; Dr. I. T. Jacobs, of Staunton; the Rev. T. H. Campbell, Stuarts Draft, and Dr. Paul H. Bowman, of Bridgewater College.

J. Ed Key, of Buena Vista, is president of the session. More than 100 delegates are expected here.

Danville Burglary Suspect Held.

Danville, Va., March 25 (Spl.).—Clarence Brown, Negro, has been arrested in Greensboro, N. C., charged with breaking into the clothing store of J. Berman last Monday night and taking merchandise valued at about $1,000.

Marylanders Pay First Settlers Honor at St. Clement's Island

Three thousand visitors attended the dedication of the tercentenary memorial cross at St. Clement's Island yesterday, honoring the landing of the first Maryland settlers and Father Andrew White there on March 25, 1634. At the left, R. Bennett Darnall, tercentenary executive committee chairman, is shown before the microphone at the start of the ceremonies introducing Gov. Albert C. Ritchie, principal speaker, who is seen in the background. In the center is the 40-foot memorial cross, presented to the State by the tercentenary commission. St. Marys County school children, bearing placques of the Leonard Calvert coat-of-arms, are seen at the right. Below are the Right Rev. Edward Phillips, S. J., provincial of the Jesuit Order in the United States, who gave the invocation, accompanied by the Rev. Edwin Niver, of the Maryland Episcopal Diocese, who gave the benediction. In right insert is Mrs. Frank J. Parran, president of the Colonial Dames of Southern Maryland, who placed the rock garden around the cross. Robert Gwathmey Merritt, vice president of the Maryland State Society of Washington, is in the left insert.

Kin of 15 Fire Victims Traced At Lynchburg

Four of 72 Homeless Men, Injured in Blaze, in Serious Condition.

Lynchburg, Va., March 25 (AP).—The bodies of 15 men burned to death in a Federal home for the homeless were in the morgue here today while a growing corps of workers sought to establish their names and find friends and relatives.

They died in an early morning fire yesterday which trapped 190 transient men in a two-story shelter camp operated under the direction of the Federal Emergency Relief Administration.

Seventy-two were injured, and today were in Lynchburg hospitals. The condition of four was said to be serious.

Alan Johnstone, FERA director for the Southeastern States, after a hurried trip from Washington, said today it was probable Federal investigation of the fire would be reopened. Johnstone in a preliminary investigation last night absolved camp authorities.

Grease Started Fire.

Today he was joined by Miss Helen Mawer, of Atlanta, associate director for the Southeast Territory.

One hundred and ninety men were sleeping in the building when flames licked up the elevator shaft from burning sausage grease being made into gravy for breakfast in the basement kitchen. Fourteen victims died in the flames. The fifteenth died early today. He was Walter Delong, of Hinton, W. Va., whose relatives wired asking that the body be sent home.

Shelter authorities were certain the names of 11 of the 15 dead had been determined. The eleventh identification was that of James Alexander Green, 14, who registered as 17, from Charlotte, N. C. His mother was said to be ill in Danville, Va.

Bodies Held for Claiming.

M. S. Burchard, State FERA director, said bodies will be held in Lynchburg morgues as long as possible to give opportunity for more accurate identification and for claiming. Those not claimed will be given "decent burial" here, he said.

Burchard and Mrs. Hugh S. Woolfolk, local FERA director, began planning reestablishment of the Lynchburg shelter.

The old shelter was in a two-story building. William Rasch, of New Orleans, who was preparing breakfast, told investigators the grease blazed as he poured water in it for gravy.

Former Police Chief Is Killed

Filling Station Operator Exonerated.

Reidsville, N. C., March 25 (Spl.).—A. J. Fair, 49, who on Monday resigned as police chief of Leaksville-Spray, N. C., was shot and killed yesterday by John Gordon, proprietor of a filling station not far from Reidsville, N. C.

Coroner C. R. Wharton later exonerated Gordon, who claimed he fired in self-defense. Fair left Leaksville Thursday and went to the tourist camp on the Greensboro highway, where Gordon operates a filling station, according to Rockingham (N. C.) county officers who investigated.

Fair became "wild" early today, it was testified, and fired several shots into the tourist home. Gordon shot him with a rifle from a window as Fair was trying to break into the kitchen door, it was said.

Danville Kiwanis Club To Equip Playgrounds

Danville, Va., March 25 (Spl.).—Two playgrounds, one for boys and the other for girls, will be equipped with recreational devices by the Danville Kiwanis Club at the children's preventorium at Hilltop Sanitorium.

The club paid for the building of the preventorium, at which undernourished children are built up. Last Christmas the entire indebtedness was lifted by raising more than $800 through the sale of Red Cross seals.

Virginia Legal Rum Situation GrowsComplex

Law All Set, Board Is Named, but Sales Are Far Off.

By J. K. Irving, Jr.

Charlottesville, Va., March 25.—No repercussion of the late, but unlamented General Assembly is so persistently reverberant as that which followed its act setting Virginia as the operator of a huge liquor store chain.

Thus far it has been a matter of echo and re-echo, for the chain exists only on the statute books and by virtue of headquarters in Richmond manned by three commissioners constituting the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board. There are no stores and there is little likelihood that there will be any for some time to come.

The State is much in the position (if one could imagine so short-sighted a business man), of a merchant who has advertised a "grand opening," but had neither location nor stock.

Just now the A. B. C. Board is swamped with business, but it isn't the kind which more than indirectly bears upon the all important matter of opening shop. The three much-perplexed men, established in quarters once occupied by the prohibition set-up, are beseiged by two armies; one of job-hunters, the other of wholesale liquor agents—one to supervise, convey and sell what the State does not possess, the other to sell what the State has, as yet, no way of placing before the public.

Many Seeking Jobs.

Of the job seekers camping in Richmond there is really no telling how many. What number will be successful has not been figured out either. Then there are the little chaps at home and hopeful citizens with good corner locations for rent, lease or sale.

Which means that the commissioners must go through with every detail of an enormous business from the jump go. Just when they will be able to get the first wheels of the machine into slow motion it would be hard indeed to predict with any degree of accuracy. Persistently harassed by people who want jobs, by people who want to sell liquor and by people who want to buy it, they are certainly not receiving the sort of support that tends to help them get going.

Maybe by June, or a little earlier, when the heavy season is over and the fiscal year near an end, the dispensaries which were prophesied as soon in the year as mid-January, will open their doors.

Meanwhile other complications arise. The nicest of these seems to be the status quo of the individual who was ready to take advantage of his freedom when the Layman act, Virginia's prohibition law, passed out March 22.

According to opinions of standard authorities, cautiously marked "horseback," there is nothing to prevent a well ordered citizen from entering the District of Columbia or Maryland and returning with a gallon of legal whisky.

Who is to determine, and how, whether it is legal or not, whether it actually came across the borders or not is probably due for tests in court. It is contended that the burden is upon the State to prove that such transportation is illegal. Another ace for the bootlegger.

The big Peery "tooth" in the new law which provides that the buyer of illegal liquor is as guilty as the seller does not seem to create any great consternation either among the former by reason of possible fines and sentences, or among the latter because of a dropping off in trade. The truth of it is that things are going along pretty much as they have been for about 15 years.

The inclination to "go legal" is rather widely expressed. But how are you going to buy from the State when the State has nothing to sell? A month or two of voluntary prohibition is a little more than could be expected.

The beer, ale and wine business is coming along as well as might be expected. Sundry vintages may arrive to complete the trio during the early days of April.

J. R. Nutty Buried.

Clifton Forge, Va., March 25 (Spl.).—Funeral services were held in Low Moor this afternoon for Jonathan Rudolph Nutty, 75, who died in his home there Friday night. His widow and seven children survive.

CWA School Rolls Admit Needy Only

Hagerstown, Md., March 25 (Spl.).—Only children of needy families are eligible to attend classes which have been started in five schools here as a CWA project, teachers in charge have been notified by J. D. Blackwell, director of vocational education in Maryland. Enrollment had not been restricted to children of needy families.

Enforcement of the new requirements makes it necessary to exclude all children except those who are entitled to free lunches. The lunch is served at midday and the classes held from 9 a. m. until 3 p. m.

Nurseries are located in three local schools, at Halfway and Williamsport, with a teacher and an assistant at each. The classes have from 30 to 40 children ranging in age from 4 to 6 years.

Virginia Board Hurries Wine, Liquor Permits

Dealers and Salesmen Are Called; Applicants Face Scrutiny.

Richmond, March 25 (AP).—The alcoholic beverage control board will put its house in order this week preparatory to its big job of providing wines and hard liquors for Old Dominion purchasers.

Wine salesmen will be interviewed by board members tomorrow morning and sellers of hard liquors will get their turn Thursday. Meanwhile, board members professed not to know the approximate price that will be charged for the alcoholic beverages.

They were emphatic, however, in saying that no special favors had been promised any of the salesmen. All, they said, will get their turn—in alphabetical order.

Other Conferences Called.

Meanwhile, T. McCall Frazier, of the board, made ready to confer tomorrow afternoon with trucking company representatives, and he will bargain for office supplies, other than furniture, at a conference Wednesday morning.

S. Heth Tyler, of Norfolk, chairman of the board, will confer with newspaper publishers this week in regard to liquor advertising regulations.

Although no policy has been announced on wine and beer licenses, it was said that all applicants about whom nothing is known will be investigated thoroughly.

Revocations Threatened.

Those found to be improper persons, or whose places bear an unfavorable reputation, will suffer the revocation of their licenses. It was understood the licensee thus deprived of his license would not be permitted to appeal and could not recover the three-fourths licensee fee paid at the time of the granting of the license.

It was emphasized that wine and beer licenses will not permit the sale of hard liquors, which will be sold only in State stores.

The board has indicated that it will not issue any wine or beer licenses in those 34 counties and two cities which voted dry last October.

The board already had held that drug stores now licensed to sell liquor for prescription may be the only holders of both on premises and off premises wine and beer licenses in Virginia.

James E. Etheridge, of Norfolk, will arrive tomorrow morning to organized and head the board's real estate division.

Loudoun's Corn-Hog Deadline Is April 14

Leesburg, Va., March 25 (Spl.).—April 14 will be the final day for signing corn-hog contracts in Loudoun County, according to County Agent J. R. Lintner.

A canvass of all eligible farmers who have not already signed is being made. Producers will find it to their advantage to aid committeemen in every way, Lintner said. Committeemen will help any producer to prepare his data for forms and complicated tenant cases are referred to State officials.

"Jeb" Stuart's Nephew Dies

Dale Carter Stuart's Rites to Be Held Today at Elk Garden.

Lebanon, Va., March 25 (AP).—Dale Carter Stuart, of Rosedale, Russell County, died today at 3:45 a. m. at the home of his son, Harry C. Stuart, at Elk Garden, after a lingering illness. His health failed rapidly since the death of his brother, former Gov. Henry C. Stuart, some months ago, with whom he had been closely associated in the farming and stock-raising business.

He was born at Wytheville, July 24, 1858, a son of William Alexander Stuart and Mary Taylor (Carter) Stuart. An uncle was Gen. J. E. B. Stuart, of the Confederate army.

He is survived by two sons, Harry C. Stuart and United States Marshal John White Stuart, and one brother, Judge John J. Stuart, of Abingdon. His wife, who died in 1931, was Miss Sallie P. White, daughter of the late John Greenway White, of Abingdon.

His home, Rosedale, was a famous abode of genial and old-fashioned hospitality to high and low alike.

Funeral services will be held at Elk Garden tomorrow at 2:30 p. m.

Work to Start On New Church At Mt. Rainier

Modern St. John's Home of Brick and Stone to Cost $16,500.

Construction of the new St. John's Episcopal Church, Mt. Rainier, will start this week. Building permits have been granted by the Maryland National Capital Parks and Planning Commission and by town officials.

The new building will rise on the site occupied by the old one at Thirty-fourth street and Mt. Rainier avenue. Modern Sunday School class rooms and other conveniences will be in the basement.

The structure will replace the one recently torn down because of alleged unsafe conditions. It will be constructed of stone and brick at a cost of $16,500. Gothic architecture will be followed throughout.

St. John's Church was founded in 1909, but it was not until Easter Sunday, April 7, 1912, that the congregation had a building of its own. Services before this were held in old Potts Hall, now Star Hall, on Rhode Island avenue.

The Rev. Walter P. Plumley, jr., is the present rector.

Interment was in Morrison Cemetery at Reynolds. Frenzel died at the home of his mother, Mrs. Wilhelmina Frenzel, here.

Luray Court Docket Light

Old Cases Top List of Those to Be Heard at Session.

Luray, Va., March 25 (Spl.).—Page County Court will open in Luray tomorrow with a heavy docket, due in part to the postponement of many criminal and civil cases from former terms in order that contested cases involving lands for the Shenandoah National Park might be settled.

A special grand jury has been summoned for the first day of the term.

Ten civil cases on appeal from Justice J. H. Booton's court will come before Judge H. W. Bertram, of the County Court.

Suits to be tried involve two claims for $30,000 against S. W. Harris, of Staunton, in which four persons were killed near Luray by an automobile allegedly driven by Harris.

College Reunion Features Staples Joining Cabinet

Richmond, March 25 (AP).—When Judge Herbert C. Gregory, Supreme Court of Appeals, administered the oath of office to his fellow townsman, former Senator A. P. Staples, of Roanoke, new attorney general, the ceremony was, in effect, a Washington-Lee alumni affair.

All of the group in the Governor's office were graduates of that institution. They were: Gov. George C. Peery, Judge Gregory, Attorney General Staples and Peter Saunders, secretary of the Commonwealth.

John Q. Rhodes, new director of the division of motor vehicles, sworn in the same day as Staples, is also a Washington and Lee man.

Union Veterans' Sons Plan Meet

Frederick, Md., March 25 (Spl.).—The annual convention of the Department of Maryland, Sons of Union Veterans of the Civil War, will be held May 1 and 2, it was announced today.

Between 75 and 100 delegates from 30 posts in Maryland, the District of Columbia, Delaware, Virginia and West Virginia are expected.

Michael Casey, Washington, D. C., is commander, and Wendall C. Hill, Washington, senior vice commander. The Department Council is composed of O. A. C. Oehmler, Washington; Elmer P. Corry, Smyrna, Del., and Howard Mitchell, Baltimore. Mrs. Cora E. Mitchell, Baltimore, is president of the auxiliary.

Vienna Nominates Its Town Ticket

Election Will Be Held in June.

Citizens of Vienna, Va., nominated candidates for town offices in mass meeting Friday night for an election the second Tuesday in June. The tickets: For mayor, C. A. Ashton, incumbent, and Vernon Gowin; Ernest Staatn and Raymond Ryman, for town sergeant. Town council, Joseph Berry, Alton Money, Arthur Branbt, Edgar T. Bennett, L. L. Freeman, James Davis, R. E. $10,945 Has Been Spent In Shenandoah County

Woodstock, Va., March 25 (Spl.).—Harold G. Chandler, CWA head for Shenandoah County, announces that $10,945 has been spent in the county for materials since the CWA projects were started and that there remains $6,900 for this purpose.

Mr. Chandler is busy winding up county CWA activities. At present 193 men are employed, 36 at the New Market airport, 20 at the Woodstock disposal plant, 4 on sanitation projects and the remainder on various projects in other towns.

Debts Reduced By Middletown

Lively Election Foreseen as Nominees Are Selected.

Middletown, Md., March 25 (Spl.).—That Middletown's annual municipal election April 2 will be one of the liveliest in recent years was indicated at the nominating convention last night when two candidates were placed in the field for each vacancy.

George L. Doub, who is completing his twenty-third term as burgess, will be opposed in the election by E. Walter Beachley, a former burgess.

Edgar H. Koogle and L. Osmon Derr, members of the present board of commissioners, were renominated. Other nominees for the three commissioner places are Leslie Schaefer, sr., Floyd M. Main, Millard C. Coblentz and J. Frank Fox.

The burgess will be elected for one year and the commissioners for two-year terms. The holdover commissioners are Lewis P. Miller and Morris R. Holter.

The annual report of Walter M. Remsburg, town register, showed that the corporation's affairs were operated at a profit of approximately $1,300. Receipts totaled $7,487.15, while the expenditures were listed at $6,196.92. The liabilities of the town were reduced by $5,000 during the year, leaving a bonded indebtedness of $21,500. The report also showed more than 97 per cent of last year's taxes have been collected and approximately 90 per cent of the water rents have been paid.

NRA Complaints Are Speeded Up

Virginia Office Increases Adjustments.

Richmond, March 25 (Spl.).—D. R. Hunt, State NRA director, announced here today that three times as many cases dealing with violations of NRA hour and wage edicts were settled this week as during any week since the offices opened January 15.

Hunt attributed this gain to increasing familiarity with NRA code provisions on the part of employes, employers, and consumers, and said that thus far little difficulty had been encountered in adjusting complaints.

The adjustment bureau is supervised by Dr. R. B. Pinchbeck and Dr. John J. Corson 3d, who handle all complaints confidentially.

Noah L. Shreckhise Funeral Set Today

Pioneer Nurseryman of Shenandoah Was 63.

Harrisonburg, Va., March 25 (Spl.).—Funeral services for Noah L. Shreckhise, 63, pioneer Shenandoah Valley nurseryman and prominent Augusta County citizen, were held today from the Pleasant Valley Church of the Brethren near Weyers Cave.

Mr. Shreckhise died Friday.

He served for 15 years as an Augusta County magistrate and was secretary-treasurer of the East Augusta Mutual Fire Insurance Company for a quarter of a century. After being graduated from Augusta Military Academy he taught school for eight years. His widow, two brothers and two sisters survive.

Liberty Surprises 9 Dry Violators

Danville Judge Releases City Farm Inmates.

Danville, Va., March 25 (Spl.).—Nine prisoners here benefited by a liquor law amnesty declared by Police Magistrate C. K. Carter and went free.

They had been convicted under the defunct Layman act, and their terms expired anywhere from within a few days to June 14. Magistrate Carter said he wished to give them the benefit of the new law, but did not release them until he had summarized its provisions.

The nine prisoners were taken by surprise and left the courtroom in high spirits. Called in from chores on the city farm, they were brought to town ignorant of what was in store for them.

Virginia Bank Heads Learn About Bandits

Norfolk Police Director Talks at Meet; U. S. Loans Discussed.

Norfolk, Va., March 25 (AP).—Means of combatting bank holdups and the assistance of bankers in making the Federal Home Owners Loan Bank in Virginia a success were suggested to approximately 200 tidewater bankers yesterday at the annual meeting of group one, Virginia Bankers Association, at Virginia Beach.

To guide the organization during the coming year, G. Franklin Lenz, of Newport News, was elected chairman to succeed Roy W. Dudley, of Norfolk. Other officers include F. R. Savage, of Williamsburg, vice chairman; Harvey T. Parker, of Newport News, secretary and treasurer, and the advisory committee, composed of John A. Alfriend, of Norfolk; G. W. Mumford, of Onancock, and J. R. Vann, of Suffolk.

The crime situation as it relates to banks was the subject of Col. Charles B. Borland, Norfolk director of public safety. What the Federal Home Owners Loan Bank has done in Virginia was explained by State Senator John J. Wicker, of Richmond.

To assist in lessening bank holdups, Col. Borland urged the installation of signal devices direct between banks and police headquarters and the assignment of "good watchmen" to identify "spotters."

"I wouldn't suggest that you arm your tellers and bookkeepers," Col. Borland said, "because the bank robber has absolutely no regard for human life and he will kill if necessary. When the bank robber comes, throw up your hands. But I would suggest that you run a wire direct from the bank to police headquarters with a signal button so that some one could get to it in the event of a holdup, in order that the police will have an opportunity to get started as soon as possible. With modern roads what they are, if the robbers get a start they are gone and apparently nobody can catch them. The police will come when you ring; that's their job."

Since it began work last August 21, the Federal Home Owners Loan Bank in Virginia has granted 2,034 home mortgage loans to a total amount of $6,519,198. Mr. Wicker told the assembly. The appraised valuation of this property was $9,734,000.

Official Ax Due For 276 CWA Men

$100,000 Spent on Work in Harrisonburg.

Harrisonburg, Va., March 25 (Spl.).—CWA workers in Harrisonburg and Rockingham received approximately $3,200 for what was probably their next-to-last week's work. The county employed 216 men and the city 60.

Next week will be the last for the CWA workers unless there is a change in plans at national headquarters. A number of local projects will not be completed because of curtailment of hours. Local officials are hopeful that in the new set-up under the Federal Relief Administration these projects may be completed.

Since the CWA work got underway in the city and county last fall, more than $100,000 has been spent for labor. All of this was devoted to much-needed improvements, particularly in school buildings and grounds.

Future Farmers Fete Dads.

Hedgesville, W. Va., March 25 (Spl.).—Members of Hedgesville Chapter, Future Farmers of America, entertained their fathers for the fourth annual father-and-son banquet last night.

Insane Man's Story Of Wealth Is Proved

Spokane, March 25 (AP).—William R. Brown, aged and infirm, used to tell neighbors around his shack that he had great stacks of money. He was committed to an insane asylum. He died there March 7, still regaling other inmates with tales of his great wealth.

M. J. Luby, an attorney, announced today that he had discovered, in safe deposit boxes, savings accounts and other places; some $26,000 Brown had accumulated during his lifetime as a laborer.

Drive Planned To Boost Park

Campaign Is Mapped to Popularize Site of Four Civil War Battles.

Fredericksburg, Va., March 25 (Spl.).—Plans for a summer educational campaign to acquaint visitors with the Fredericksburg and Spotsylvania National Battlefield Memorial Park were announced by George A. Palmer, chief historian of the park, in a letter to Frank M. Chichester, chairman of the Battlefield Park Association.

Preparations have been made to issue a park pamphlet, informaiton sheets for hotels and filling stations, maps of the field, and signs, and to conduct a ranger-guide training course. Park officials have decided to launch their program before development of the park is completed.

Rangers will initiate the summer program at the beginning of Virginia Garden Week, April 23. Palmer has also begun a program to attract convention groups and student bodies to the park, which embraces four Civil War battlefields.

This program will be among other matters to come before a meeting of the newly reorganized Military Park Commission to be called soon by Arno B. Cammerer, director of national parks.

Orange County Forces To Be Reduced April 1

Orange, Va., March 25 (Spl.).—Orange County CWA work will be taken over by the FERA April 1, when reduced forces will be employed.

Work on the Orange County painting project will be continued by a $619 allocation. Ben F. Selby, disbursing officer distributed 153 checks totalling $1,215.81 to CWA employes last week.

Leesburg Legion To Give Minstrel

Leesburg, Va., March 25 (Spl.).—A minstrel show will be held in the town hall tomorrow night under auspices of the Loudoun Post of the American Legion. Mrs. D. D. Plaster is in charge of the cast.

Mrs. T. M. Fendall will be hostess to the historical meeting of Loudoun Chapter, United Daughters of the Confederacy at her home in Leesburg on Monday, at 8 p. m.

Virginia's Motor Tax Receipts Up 300% Over 1932

Richmond, March 25 (AP).—John Q. Rhodes, director of the division of motor vehicles, said yesterday that $276,393.63 had been collected in automobile license taxes the first 23 days of the present fiscal year.

The amount is an increase of 300 per cent above the corresponding period last year.

He pointed out that the increase was extraordinary in view of the fact that licenses had been cut from 70 cents per hundred to 40 cents.

Berryville Rites For Mrs. Fox

Ashes Rest Beside Grave of Parents, According to Last Request.

Berryville, Va., March 25 (Spl.).—In accordance with her deathbed request, the ashes of Mrs. Bertram Fox, who died six weeks ago in London, England, were buried here today beside the graves of her parents, Dr. and Mrs. C. E. Lippitt, and her brother, Dr. Thomas McCormic Lippitt, U. S. N.

A sister, Mrs. William Wattles, and a niece, Miss Nannie Fox, brought Mrs. Fox's ashes back from England. Mrs. Wattles left for England when she was notified of her sister's illness, arriving ten days before she died.

Today's services were conducted by the Rev. Dr. Louis Tucker, rector of Grace Episcopal Church.

Mrs. Fox's husband was connected with an engineering concern in London.

Women Voters to Hear Dr. Augustus Thomas

Dr. Augustus O. Thomas, internationally known educator, past president of the World Federation of Educational Associations and now secretary general of the association, will be the principal speaker at the March meeting of the Organized Women Voters of Arlington County Wednesday at the Cherrydale Methodist Episcopal Church.

Luncheon will be served at 12:30 o'clock, followed by the business session. Dr. Thomas will speak at 1:30 o'clock.

Peace Justices Found Tardy in Their Reports

Norfolk, Va., March 25 (Spl.).—After interviewing practically all of the 18 justices of the peace in Norfolk County yesterday, T. McCarthy Downs, State auditor, declared the auditing of accounts of the justices had not been completed.

However, he declared, the investigation has developed so far that "some of the justices of the peace have been tardy in making their official monthly reports."

Rabbit Fever Danger Halts Importations

LeCompte Points Out Peril at Izaak Walton League Dinner.

Hagerstown, Md., March 25 (Spl.).—No rabbits will be imported into Maryland for the present because of the danger of tuleremia, E. Lee LeCompte, State game warden, stated at the annual banquet of the Hagerstown Chapter, Izaak Walton League, held at the State Armory. Three hundred sportsmen from Washington County and throughout the Cumberland Valley and Baltimore attended the banquet.

It is planned to distribute 10,000 quail, however, to make up for the absence of cottontails, LeCompte said. The State game farms at Gwynnbrook and Wicomico will increase their laying pairs of Bob White quail this year by 50 per cent in order to obtain the necessary birds.

There have been 34,000 trout, both rainbow and native brook trout, distributed for the coming fishing season, A. M. Powell, superintendent of hatcheries for the State Conservation Department, told the sportsmen.

Fred Orsinger, Washington, representing Frank T. Bell, U. S. Commissioner of Fisheries, presented a cup to Charles F. Strole, of Hagerstown, who caught the largest bass during the 1933 season. It was a small-mouthed bass, weighing 4 pounds 1 ounce, and was caught in the Potomac.

Among other speakers were M. C. James, U. S. Bureau of Fisheries; Richard T. Norris, chief deputy game warden for Maryland; Capt. Amos Creighton, commander of the "oyster navy" steamer; Harold S. Kolmer, secretary of the State Game Department; James W. McCalister, vice president of the Maryland Sportsmen's Club; Harry W. Nice, Baltimore, Republican candidate for governor; Dr. Charles H. Conley, Frederick, Democratic candidate for governor; Dr. J. Hubert Wade, Boonsboro; State Senator William D. Byron; Henry P. Bridges, secretary Woodmont Rod and Gun Club; E. W. Surber, Federal hatcheries biologist, Leetown, W. Va.

Habeas Corpus Frees Youth, Holdup Witness

Hagerstown, Md., March 25 (Spl.).—Franklin Mellotte, 25, wanted as a material witness at Martinsburg, W. Va., in the robbery case against Harry Stotler, local taxi driver, was released under a writ of habeas corpus by Judge Frank G. Wagaman yesterday. He had been held in jail here since March 10.

Mellotte is alleged to have been an occupant of Stotler's taxicab and a witness of an alleged holdup of Angelo Robucci, Nessle, W. Va. Robucci had engaged Stotler to drive him to his home from here, and en route, he told police, Stotler held him up at the point of a revolver and took $35. Stotler is in jail at Martinsburg awaiting trial.

Rural Youth's Outlook Topic Of Conference

Women's Session Will Hear Experts on Job Prospects.

The occupational outlook for rural youth will be discussed at a regional board meeting of the Southern Women's Educational Alliance at 7 p. m., tomorrow at the Mayflower Hotel.

Speakers will include Dr. Arthur E. Morgan, chairman of the Tennessee Valley Authority, and Dr. Harold F. Clark, of Columbia University.

Dr. Clark will propose a way to regulate the number of persons engaged in agriculture and suggest different phases of work which may be taken up in rural areas. Technicians selected to discuss his proposals are Dr. O. E. Baker, of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics; Mrs. Katherine M. Cook, chief of special problems in the Office of Education, and Dr. Alba M. Edwards, occupational statistician for the Census Bureau.

An informal discussion will follow the talks. Among the authorities designated to question the speakers and comment upon their views are Dr. Stuart Rice, assistant director of the Bureau of Census; Alfred D. Stedman and Miss Gertrude L. Waren, of the extension service of the Department of Agriculture.

Speakers will be introduced by Dr. Latham Hatcher, president of the Southern Women's Educational Alliance and Dr. Kathryn McHale, general director of the American Association of University Women, will preside.

The conference will reconvene at the Mayflower Thursday.

Tuberculosis Tests On Convicts Planned

Denver, March 25 (AP).—Physicians seeking to determine the human efficacy of a "preventive" tuberculosis serum said tonight they would start their experiments as soon as 12 convicts have been chosen from 800 Colorado Penitentiary prisoners who volunteered for the work.

Dr. H. J. Corper and associates at the National Jewish Hospital here have tested the serum extensively upon animals and reported it apparently safeguarded them from tuberculosis baccilli infection. The convicts chosen will receive pardons after the experiments are completed.

Kiwanis Club to Hold Easter Rites Thursday

The annual pre-Easter service of the Washington Kiwanis Club will take place during luncheon Thursday at the Mayflower Hotel.

The meeting will be in charge of the Rev. Simpson B. Daugherty, pastor of the United Brethren Church; the Rev. Edward H. Roach, St. Mark's Catholic Church; the Rev. John C. Palmer, Columbia Heights Presbyterian Church, and the Rev. Oscar F. Blackwelder, Lutheran Church of the Reformation.

Maj. B. M. Purssell Hurt When He Falls on Ice

Maj. B. M. Purssell, retired, 81, of 215 Wooten avenue, Friendship Heights, Md., one of the first officers of the Army's modernized Signal Corps, was confined to his bed in his home yesterday as the result of a fall on the ice Saturday.

Maj. Purssell, one-time associate of the late Maj. Gen. George O. Squier and widely known as one of the developers of the modern Signal Corps, slipped on the ice as he was leaving his home, suffering a severe back strain.

Twins Hurt Identically, Win Identical Damages

Los Angeles, March 25 (AP).—Mrs. Jennie B. Johnson and Mrs. Jessie B. Clark are twins. Each received a broken leg in the same accident. Each was discharged from the hospital the same day.

Each was awarded $6,000 damages against Corbit Faber and his wife, Ferne Faber, for injuries received when their automobile collided with a car driven by Mrs. Faber.

BUMPING into a young woman employe who was dashing through a hall in the NRA section at Commerce Building, we inquired as to the haste. She showed me a doctor's certificate and a statement about several days of sick leave which had to be sworn to before a notary. Unusual procedure and further waste of time, we thought. However, that is the rule over at NRA now.

BAKER.

After months of overtime work in crowded offices, the employes are now pinioned under rigid restrictions regarding leave due to illness. The following NRA office memorandum, issued last week by Bradish J. Carroll, jr., administrative officer and chief clerk, is the explanation:

"All requests for leave," says the order, "must be approved by the head of each division before being forwarded to the Chief Clerk's Office.

"Persons reported on sick leave or leave without pay on Saturdays will be charged with one full day, and if absent on Monday, Sunday also will be charged.

"All sick leave slips in excess of two days must be signed by an attending physician. Requests for less than three days must be sworn to before a notary public."

According to the foregoing order, an employe who is absent a half day Saturday and all day Monday—a net absence of one and a half days—loses three days of pay.

Sidney Wallenstein, Patent Office tennis champion, lost a love set to a little player named Evelyn of Cleveland. Friends say it is a perfect match. Bashful Sidney told his office associates about it last week. The marriage will take place in Cleveland soon.

Examinations Cancelled

Cancellation of the examination for district supervisor, Bureau of Industrial Alcohol, Treasury, is announced by Civil Service Commission. Receipt of applications for this position was to close April 12. No reason was given for the cancellation.

The District Federation of Federal Employes Educational Forum hears Civil Service Commissioner Lucille Foster McMillin at the National Federation of Federal Employes downtown offices, with Miss Gertrude McNally presiding. Commissioner McMillin is shown speaking with Luther C. Steward, N. F. F. E. president, and Ulrey J. Biller, forum chairman, on the platform.

The final match will be played this week in the Marine Corps Headquarters Bowling League. At the last matches, the Paymasters moved into first place by taking three games from the Commandants. The Quartermasters took the odd game from the Adjutant and Inspectors. Paymasters hold a seven-game lead over Commandants and Quartermasters, who are tied. Adjutant and Inspectors are cellar occupants.

Diary Guest Tickets.

IF your name in this column is followed by (*), call in person on the Federal Diary editor the same day. You will receive tickets to Loew's Columbia (Ann Harding in "Gallant Lady"); or to Loew's Palace ("Eskimo Wife Traders"), or to Loew's Fox (stage, "32 Musical Queens" and three other acts; screen, Lowe and McLaughlin in "No More Women"). Persons whose names appear on holidays, call for tickets the next day.

Diary office hours are: Daily, except Saturday, 12 to 1 p. m. and 4:30 to 6 p. m.; Saturday, 12 to 2:30 p. m.

Now that automobiles have proved a great moral force by stopping horse-stealing, the police have more time to tag the cars of pay-cut ridden Government employes. That's how Clerk Jo Blo figures out the reason for three parking tickets on his car.

After giving her a vote of thanks for her previous work, members of Labor branch of Local No. 2, N. F. F. E., reelected Miss Bertha Blair, of the Women's Bureau, as their president for the ensuing year at a meeting at the Labor Department.

Other officers chosen are: Joseph Cushman, Immigration and Naturalization, first vice president; Miss Florence Parker, Labor Statistics, second vice president; Miss Edna L. Stone, Secretary's Office, secretary-treasurer. Miss Blair and Charles E. Burner, Labor Statistics, were delegated to act on the board of representatives of Local No. 2.

A vote of thanks was also given Miss Mary Hurley, outgoing secretary-treasurer. The nominating committee was headed by Mrs. Ruth Curry Brooks, Immigration and Naturalization.

Six-foot-three Keith Misegades (*), examiner, Patent Office, recently flew to Cleveland. Examiner Simon Yaffee chided Mr. Misegades, wanting to know how the plane got off the ground with him in it.

"Easy," retorted cloud-bumping Misegades. "The pilot got up a half mile before taking me on."

Today's Epitaph.

Went out in the rain—
It shrank and choked him to death.

Travel Talker Will Conduct Canadian Tour

George B. Mitchell Will Lecture Tomorrow; Post Series Near End.

Canada, the great recreational land, will be described and pictured tomorrow night at the Masonic Auditorium, New York avenue at Thirteenth street, by George B. Mitchell.

Mr. Mitchell has enjoyed years of intimate contact with Canada and Canadians in a measure probably unexceeded by any other person in comprehensive coverage of the vast territory beyond the northern border of the United States. He has dug gold with the "sourdoughs" in the Klondike, hobnobbed with the Blackfeet Indians on Canada's prairie lands, canoed, camped and fished in Ontario's hinterland and Quebec Province. He was one of the first white men to cross the Great Divide down into southern British Columbia and brought back studies in color that will clearly depict that wild and untrammeled region in tomorrow's travelogue. Motion pictures will further supplement his vivid descriptions of Quebec, French Canada, the Canadian Rockies and the Dominion's vast mountain parks.

In addition to his Canadian experiences, Mr. Mitchell has spent many years in world travel and is particularly familiar with the Far East. He was associated with the first official Chinese Red Cross, an intimate of China's famous Christian general, Feng-yu-hsiang, and is personally acquainted with the newly enthroned Emperor of Manchukuo.

Mr. Mitchell also is recognized as an artist with pencil, brush and camera and his lecture on Canada will be featured by many unusual examples of his work.

Because of his exceptional standing as a traveler and lecturer it is expected that tomorrow's occasion will prove one of the high spots of the elaborate program that has been presented by The Washington Post through the winter months. Tickets will be available at the nominal charge of 25 cents at 7 p. m., tomorrow, at the Masonic Auditorium box office, and Mr. Mitchell will be introduced to his audience promptly at 8:15.

Tall Cedars Will Visit Acacia Masonic Lodge

Led by Grand Tall Cedar J. Fred Huber, members of Capitol Forest, No. 104, Tall Cedars of Lebanon, will visit Acacia Lodge, No. 18, F. A. A. M., tomorrow evening.

Huber will present a program, including glee club numbers by the Cedar chanters, directed by Homer S. Pope, and fancy drill formations by the Royal Rangers, commanded by Fay D. Patton.

Names Sought Of All Crippled Children Here

Association Planning Set-up to Expand Facilities for Treatment.

Names of all crippled children in Washington, whether they are under treatment or not, are sought by the District Association for Crippled Children and Disabled Adults, to complete a census.

The public is asked to cooperate in the census. Mrs. B. J. Drake, chairman of the census committee, asks that all names of crippled children be sent to her in care of the Weightman School, Twenty-third and M streets northwest, by April 1. Mrs. Drake also asks that any child suffering with heart trouble and unable to attend school be regularly reported.

The following types of cases are within the census: Children under 21, who have any loss or deformity of the leg, arm, spine, neck or hip, and those who have any paralysis or lack of muscular coordination. Children with even a slight curvature of the spine are to be reported.

The census is the first step in a survey by the District association to organize community interest in the disabled child. Orthopedic clinics will be arranged and the parents of crippled children will be informed of clinic facilities.

The association will be allotted 80 per cent of the proceeds gained from the sale here of White Cross Seals during Easter week to finance the survey.

Senate Today Seeks Veteran, Wage Accords

Federal Pay Restoration Agreed, War Benefits to Conference.

A final effort to reconcile House and Senate views on benefits to veterans is scheduled to begin today when the Senate takes up as its first business the independent offices appropriations bill, with a view to sending it back to conference once more.

Unable to reach a satisfacory compromise on the Senate floor Saturday, Administration leaders made up their minds to accept the "5-and-5" Government salary restoration voted by the House and put the question of veterans' benefits up to a joint conference.

The Senate has allowed some $118,000,000 additional benefits to veterans; the House only $83,000,000. Division of opinion in the Senate being too sharp to make compromise likely, the next best thing is held to be acceptance of all other differences (primarily pay cut restoration) and then trust to luck in conference.

If the joint conference is successful in finding a figure which stands some chance of Executive approval, the bill may be expected to go to the White House fairly soon. If not, no one knows how long it will be before the President has a chance to express himself on additional outlays.

President Roosevelt has indicated he probably would approve the House plan to restore 5 per cent of Government salaries as of February 1 and a further 5 per cent next July 1. But he has also warned he will veto restoration of veterans' benefits if the figure submitted is too high.

U. S. Will Transform Dam Site Into City

Kansas City, March 25 (AP).—Forty architects and draughtsmen working in cooperation with the United States Engineers' Office here are preparing to transform the wilderness of the Fort Peck Dam site in northeastern Montana into a modern town with housing and conveniences for 5,000 to 8,000 persons.

"DODGING TRAFFIC TAKES HEALTHY NERVES, TOO, MR. HOCKEY PLAYER—"

Miss Ruth Dodd of New York City speaks with authority on the perils of a pedestrian. She says:

"Of course it takes healthy nerves to lead a championship hockey team. But let me say a word about healthy nerves in behalf of those millions of us who do our walking along city streets. People rushing madly by—trolleys clanging—traffic whistles shrilling—huge trucks bearing down on you at every crossing—it's enough to make nerves jump and quiver! I enjoy a smoke any time—and smoke steadily, too. My cigarette? Camels. They're milder, taste marvelously—and don't interfere with healthy nerves."

Captain "Bill" Cook of the New York Rangers, 1933 Champion Hockey Team, says: "A hockey player can't afford to have 'nerves.' The way I guard my nerves and yet smoke all I want is to smoke only Camels. They have a taste that sure hits the spot. I smoke a lot and I find that Camels never get on my nerves or tire my taste."

How Are YOUR Nerves?

Few are those today who have not been face to face with the "jangled nerves" that our modern, high-speed life is blamed for!

You know the signs of nerves that flinch—tenseness, irritability. Fussy little habits like key-rattling...pencil-tapping.

Check up now on your habits. Eating. Sleeping. Your work and play. And get a fresh slant on smoking by starting on Camels.

☛ Camels are made from finer, MORE EXPENSIVE TOBACCOS than any other popular brand.

You'll find Camels rich in flavor—yet mild and delicate. Smoking will have a new zest. And each Camel renews the enjoyment...the pleasure of smoking at its best!

You And You And You.

As her vessel swung into its slip in New York, Nila, who had been writing industriously all morning on her typewriter, burst from her cabin with her arms swung wide and her brown hair blowing in the wind. "Here I am," she said, "do with me what you will." Later when she was asked about her plans for the future, she said: "The sun shines on Athens and Athens shines on the sun, there are Lotus flowers and all I ask are hair ribbons and roller skates." Bursting into laughter she pinched a reporter on the cheek and cried: "You are my religion you and you and you and you I love you all, every one is my family, you are all my family, you and you and you."

Nila Cram Cook, who fled from Greece to Gandhi, who abandoned the Mahatma's teachings and plunged into the interior of India only to show up later as Janet Gaynor in a hotel at New Delhi, and who was forcefully deported, still bearing the star on her forehead signifying that she was once the Blue Serpent Goddess of the Hindus, is a modern Alice in Wonderland. Wildly running around the world, usually garbed in a flowing white sheet, she has seen life all upside down and has given every one a good laugh.

But it seems to us the reporter who was pecked on the cheek missed a chance for immortality. Had he only seized the opportunity, he might have been long remembered as the man who, at the last resounding "you," seized Nila Cram Cook by the shoulder and spinning her around, remarked, "Take off your disguise. We know you. You're Gertrude Stein."

A Truce Only.

No definitive settlement of the problems that confront labor and capital in the automobile industry can be expected to result from any compromise proposals that may be accepted at the present time. The most that can be hoped for is a truce to hostilities that will afford opportunity for later consideration of the fundamental organization problems confronting all those connected with the industry. The stalemate which has prevented an agreement from being reached apparently is not due to inability to solve these basic issues. Gen. Johnson says that the only point remaining to be settled is just "damned nonsense." "You wouldn't believe it, if I told you," he observed.

This statement will dash unwarranted hopes that the time has come for a final "show-down" between labor and capital to determine their respective rights under the recovery act. Those who reason in this fashion lose sight of the fact that the industrial world is in a state of flux and the country is going blindly ahead under a program labeled "emergency" and "temporary," toward a goal not yet defined.

Long-time policies regulating the relationships between labor and capital can not be based upon shifting political and economic sands. Compromises designed to effect a balance between the conflicting claims of both sides provide the only feasible method of immediate escape from costly industrial struggles. Until we know how great a part the Government intends to play in the regimentation of both labor and capital, there can be no final, deliberate decision on many issues of primary importance. At present about all that can be done is to protect both employers and employes against coercion when they enter into collective bargaining agreements with one another.

Italy's Corporative State.

If Premier Mussolini's version is to be accepted, Italy went to the polls yesterday to drive another nail in the coffin of "economic liberalism." The people "elected" 400 candidates to the Chamber of Deputies. But the new deputies had already been chosen by the Fascist Grand Council, and there was no opportunity to vote for any one else. Moreover, the Italian Parliament itself is in a state of dissolution. Mussolini is gradually transferring its functions to the National Council of Corporations.

It might be said that this election was only a farewell gesture to representative government in Italy. Even a solidly Fascist Chamber of Deputies does not serve Il Duce's purposes. It is too political and sectional in its attitude. By transferring the most important legislative powers to the National Council he plans to inaugurate the "corporative state," in which every economic group will be directly subservient to the will of the government.

The National Council represents the collective interests of every group of producers, both employers and employes. Under its domination strikes, lockouts and social disturbances will not be tolerated. Every individual will be required to work as a social duty. Every interest must yield to the greater objectives of the corporative state. Extensive powers will thus be wielded by the National Council, but behind this group stands Mussolini himself, who is the embodiment of the corporative state. As the Italian experiment progresses it is apparent that Mussolini is trying to evolve a system out of his personal dictatorship. But it remains to be seen whether the system will be as strong as the man.

An Arresting Comparison.

In less chaotic times no comment would be necessary on a statement to the effect that some unnamed member of the Administration has referred to the President as "the Kerensky of this revolution." The construction of historical parallels, accurate or otherwise, is a relatively harmless amusement, when it is undertaken as such.

But when the national situation is as serious as is the case today; when a definite trend toward economic recovery is being held back by legislation with obviously ulterior objectives, such assertions become cause for reflection. They arouse widespread attention not because they are intrinsically startling but because candid analysis of the situation reveals that the assertion, whatever its source, is based on certain substantial premises.

When the Administration came to power, just over a year ago, its opportunity for constructive action was literally unparalleled. Three and a half years of depression had left the morale of the country low and created a desire for strong leadership exceptional in the history of the American people. The individualistic psychology of an independent-minded stock had not altered, but citizens everywhere, in all walks of life, felt deeply that through no fault of their own, opportunities for constructive expression had been shut off. The popular demand was for a leadership which would restore as much as possible of traditional American democracy, regardless of how drastic the measures requisite to that end. Both Mr. Roosevelt personally and the traditions of the party which he headed appeared to promise such leadership.

For over a year, during which time a degree of recovery has been apparent in almost every nation, the President has received a volume of popular support seldom accorded any Chief Executive. During this period, however, he has been developing policies, first under the plea of national emergency, more lately with the vague objective of a "planned economy," which have become increasingly at variance with campaign assurances. In times like the present too strict adherence to the details of a preconceived position would have been expected. But consistency in matters of principle could and should have been maintained.

Instead of lending his magnetic personality to the re-creation of a Nation of free men, the President has let the country be steered closer and closer to a system of rigid State regimentation which is reminiscent of the feudal system. The criterion of that economic system was complete subordination of the individual to codes and standards prescribed from above. It was, in many respects, a generous system. For those within its organization there was neither unemployment nor starvation, provided prescribed obligations were fulfilled. But feudalism had the fatal weakness of stereotyping the position, social and economic, of every human unit within its scope. It was a static and not a dynamic civilization, and for that reason it never gained full control among Anglo-Saxon peoples.

The President's indorsement of our present essentially backward trend is probably unintentional. It is the ideal of certain of his advisers, not his own warm instinctive reaction toward the opposite principle of fully-developed human liberty. But under the terrific pressure of executive office there is inadequate opportunity to consider the goal toward which a policy is tending. With the inevitability of Greek tragedy a line of development, once started, may move on toward the end which clever doctrinaires anticipate. And the record shows how one step has led imperceptibly to another, each leading further from the fundamental traditions of the Democratic party and the expectations of March 4, 1933.

It is in the light of the distance already traveled, and the impetus acquired along that road, that the references to Kerensky assume their full significance. The author of those references should be ascertained, for he is a thinker of considerable perspicacity. He knows that it was the tragedy of Kerensky to be caught in a current whose fatal drift he did not understand until it was too late. In almost every other respect, of course, the parallel is inapposite and unsustainable. But the illustration of the peril which confronts leadership when tested principles cease to be its guide is neither fantastic nor untimely.

Thoughtful And Sound.

President Roosevelt has indorsed the "general principles" of the Wagner-Lewis unemployment insurance bill as an essential part of a long-time program of economic planning. Unlike much of the legislation that Congress has passed during the last two years, this is not an emergency measure. By no stretch of the imagination could it be considered a substitute for the CWA and the other extravagant forms of relief established by the present Administration. The President merely hopes and believes "that such funds will, by maintaining the purchasing power of those temporarily out of work, act as a stabilizing device in our economic structure and as a method of retarding the rapid downward spiral curve and the onset of severe economic crises."

This candid indorsement of a principle which has gained general acceptance in most advanced countries affords encouraging evidence that in some fields at least the President is ready to go forward with comprehensive social legislation. Unemployment insurance is the best method that has been evolved for carrying jobless workers through periods of enforced idleness. Although it is not intended to afford relief to all destitute people, nor to obviate the necessity of outright doles in times of emergency, it is a practical and effective means of distributing the costs of temporary unemployment and adding a measure of security to the wage earner.

Apparently the President did not concern himself with details of the Wagner-Lewis bill. His letter to Chairman Doughton, of the Ways and Means Committee, was confined to the broad principles of that measure. Some of its provisions are subject to criticism. The whole plan ought to be scrutinized with the utmost care, since it provides the basis of a system that may be permanently established in American industry. But the general indorsement of the President serves to crystallize the attitude of millions of citizens who have come to regard unemployment reserves as a necessary part of any comprehensive economic planning.

Still Seeking A Way Out.

Reports that the Administration is still seeking a means whereby transportation of the air mail may be turned back to private companies within a few weeks indicate dissatisfaction with the revised McKellar bill. Some of the President's advisers, if not the President himself, are looking for a more expeditious way out of the air mail controversy than this measure would provide. Their attitude stands out in contrast to that of congressional leaders who seem to regard the air transport business as a political football.

The most important change in the McKellar bill is that permitting the former carriers to prosecute their claims against the Government without waiving their right to bid again for air-mail contracts. After a prolonged controversy the former contractors have won the "privilege" of asserting constitutional rights, which never should have been questioned.

On the other hand, a definite attempt is made to penalize all representatives of air transport companies who participated in the 1930 conferences with Postmaster General Brown. No company having an officer attending any of those meetings would be eligible to bid for a new contract. This gross discrimination, without any specific move to determine whether these company officials acted in any manner fraudulently, is akin to the previous effort to preclude petitions for redress. No bill which presumes that all of the former carriers are guilty of collusion, and fails to provide for proper adjudication of charges against them can be considered satisfactory.

Moreover, this measure would not permit early restoration of the air transport system as a private enterprise. A week ago it appeared that the President was so exercised over the loss of life in the Army Air Corps that some emergency steps might be taken to return this service to private companies. But the new bill would leave the status of the former carriers in a tangle, and would give new bidders six months to prepare for actual flying. Under this arrangement the curtailed service provided by the Army might continue for the next eight or nine months, or, if there should be another epidemic of fatalities, it might be stopped altogether. In either event continued disintegration of the air transport business for a considerable period would be the probable result.

Literature And Life.

The Commonweal has been forum lately for a spirited discussion over the lack of a great Catholic novel. This controversy follows one of a similar nature in the radical weeklies, where considerable hullabaloo has been raised over the need for a great novel of the proletariat. In each case the argument has been primarily one of definition, something which has not been forthcoming.

It is a laudable ambition for both schools, starting from such divergent positions, to be aiming toward the same goal of greatness. One of the difficulties in the way is pictured by Stenkowsky, a Russian critic, who said anent his own country some time ago: "We do not possess a literature; we have nothing but a book trade." But this situation is not an insurmountable barrier to greatness. The real barrier, it would seem, is the one that inevitably gets in the way of any single group when it would still subscribe to its own doctrinary limitations and yet achieve universality.

In a little magazine called Spirit, published by the Catholic Poetry Society of America, the editor quotes Edmund Wilson's advice that the modern writer descend from his ivory tower and once more participate in the common and normal, if not usual, human experiences. "As long as he staggers in the belief that 'Scripture has become literature, and literature Scripture,'" the writer warns, "he will continue to write nonsense and no one will listen to him."

In other words, as long as the Catholic writer strives only to write a great Catholic novel, his tendency will be to produce but a tract; as long as the Communist strives only to write a great proletarian novel, he probably will not rise above propaganda. But when an author, whether Catholic or Communist, sits down and writes from his heart about humanity, his book will be worth reading and, if his heart is full enough, probably the book will approach greatness.

What has become of the old-fashioned person who used to worry himself sick every spring because the Government spent so much money distributing garden seed?

Letters to the Editor

The Post welcomes letters from its readers. All communications must be signed with the writer's name and address. Upon publication initials or pen names will be used if requested. Letters over 250 words are subject to condensation.

Are We Being Fooled?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: A fleet of beautiful Army planes has just passed over—and the fliers are doing the job quite well. Are these of the same type as the obsolete, worn-out planes about which our legislators are bleating so loudly? If so, why doesn't one or two "crack up" each day? Or did the Army select only its obsolete, worn-out planes to be used as mail carriers? Are we all being fooled? Could all this noise about the deplorable condition of our Army air equipment be just one more part in the "smear America" campaign—in the policy of destruction of confidence which is being carried on by the Administration's social revolutionists?

While we are on this subject, why wasn't the Pan-American Airways' contract canceled?

Were Mrs. Roosevelt, her press writers and photographer, and others, guests of the Pan-American Airways on her recent Caribbean trip, or were they guests of the taxpayers?

More Relief Needed.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The President has done more for humanity than any man has ever done. The majority of the people were suffering for the necessities of life, many were stealing and robbing stores for food, when he took command of the situation and gave out the one needed thing—money and jobs. The pity of it all is, that so many are still suffering, so many who have not had the smallest share of Government money and the ones who needed it most—they are still suffering for food and fuel on account of the faults of those in charge of the Relief Administration.

The advisory board should be composed of men and women who know what poverty means. The relief administrator, instead of pitching jobs out, like a handful of loose money, to fall where they will, should have employed the proper men and women to take charge of the various offices—men and women who belonged to the community.

In Accord With Mr. MacKenzie.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: May I add my say so to W. P. MacKenzie's remark on your clean-up campaign? He says, "Sometimes I feel Washington is the most beautiful big city in the world and sometimes I feel it is the dirtiest." Mr. MacKenzie is absolutely right about our dirty gutters, listing 18 different articles he saw in the one section.

The fault is not with our equipment and facilities for cleaning, but the main obstacle lies in our parking law, allowing motorists to use the streets and public highways for garages, making it impossible to clean the streets and gutters.

There is a proposal pending to remove our precious trees from some streets so as to widen them and make more room for the cars which often park in one spot from week to week. Why can't something be done by our officials to overcome this increasing disgraceful situation since we are not able to vote on it ourselves?

Let's Be Consistent.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Several days ago I noticed a young colored man polishing an automobile on one of the downtown streets. A policeman walked up to the man and in a very rough and objectionable manner, as I thought, demanded to know whether he had not been told not to clean automobiles on the street.

If it is a violation of some police regulation to clean a car on the streets, it seems that such a regulation should be suspended until the economic condition of the country is better than it is today. These are unusual times, and unusual remedies have to be resorted to in order to alleviate the present conditions as much as possible.

On the Philharmonic.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have heard from several influential quarters that the National Symphony Orchestra has driven out the Philharmonic. This is not only unjust but most uncomplimentary to the Philharmonic. Perhaps we are equally responsible for bringing the Boston orchestra in a series for the first time in many years. That ought to square the account of our orchestra. However, then we must also assume the responsibility for throwing out the whole radius of the Philharmonic, which no longer tours afield anywhere except near New York. The fact is that the prices of National Symphony tickets are within the reach of a large number of people to whom the price of a Philharmonic ticket has never been possible. Being an inveterate concertgoer myself, I can State that the Philharmonic audience had become discouragingly slim before the National Symphony was born, and if it had not been for the efforts of a group of guarantee-raisers the discontinuance of the Philharmonic would have occurred at least a year earlier than it did.

This sort of unreasonable criticism does a good deal of harm to the National Symphony, and certainly does not materially advance the cause of music.

Setting a Precedent.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In your issue of March 14, Mary Edgar Wilson says with regard to a man wearing or not wearing hat and coat: "The season is approaching when he will be writing to you about his desire to go without his coat. It will never occur to him to take it off."

To me, as a former resident of Washington, this letter means one of two things—that her beautiful city has wonderfully changed in its attitude toward lowly man and his attire or else she is not well posted on her subjects. Well do I remember an occasion when two male companions and I went to a moving-picture show on F street on a July afternoon. It was so hot we dared to flirt with "the fury of the wrath" we were all but certain would come. Going far over on the right aisle, we boldly, openly removed our coats! We sat back in profound admiration of our boldness in defying traditional custom.

We no sooner became comfortably seated than came a gentle but firm tap on the shoulder accompanied with a soft though none-the-less dignified voice and no less stern words of an usherette, "So sorry, but if you men wish to remain, you must put on your coats." And were our faces red!

Blue Cats and Prosperity.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Reading your editorial "Less Milk, More Prosperity." I wondered if the interesting article entitled "A Blue Cat in Every Home for Depression Cure," inserted on page 4768 of the Congressional Record, March 15, 1934, by Senator Dickinson, had escaped your attention. It is worthy of the serious study of everyone at this juncture.

A Hopeful Sign.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I wonder how many readers of The Post saw the beautiful rainbow on Sunday, March 18.

As we entered Alexandria, upon returning from an enjoyable ride to Mount Vernon, there appeared in the sky this beautiful rainbow. When conditions seem to be more or less in a turmoil too much stress can not be laid on this visible sign of God's presence.

MRS. JOHN K. HILLERS.
Washington.

Where Is Mr. Churchill?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In The Post of the March 22 William Lyon Phelps asks what has become of Winston Churchill? Last summer I heard of him through my daughter who, as an art student, at Goose Rocks Beach, Maine, listened to him talk on his philosophy of life.

I gathered that about fifteen years ago Mr. Churchill laid aside his pen, and has spent the interim working on a very high and fine theory which he hopes to prove in open court, so that none can doubt.

During the discussion someone intimated that while she was being pleasantly entertained, she was losing time from her painting. My daughter interposed, "I don't feel that way about it. I feel that I am getting something that will broaden my thinking and make me a better artist;" to which Mr. Churchill replied, "And possibly I may learn something from you."

Whether this indicated that he has the open mind that can learn from stars and birds, babes and sages, or whether it was merely a polite gesture, I do not know; but in either case it goes to prove the old saying that all great things (lives included) are simple.

Conscientious Voting.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: On my desk is a darn good newspaper. It is, of course, The Washington Post, and I have just finished reading two articles, one headed "Democratic Rebels in House on Spot," and the other headed "Really" which quotes Mr. Jim Farley as saying that "he found more honesty in the ranks of politicians than in any other profession."

I hope that Mr. Farley is right, for if he is, it means our representatives in Washington will vote according to their conscience and not be intimidated by the patronage dispensers.

The article, "Democratic Rebels in House on Spot," states Speaker Rainey is having a list made of members who voted wrong. Where does it say in the Constitution that our law-makers, whose first duty is to their constituents, are wrong when they don't vote according to the so-called leaders? HARKIE.

A Canadian NRA.

British Columbia, third in size of the nine Canadian provinces, expects to establish an NRA of its own. The projects spring from the brain of Mr. Duff Patullo, prime minister of the province.

British Columbia is not sharing as largely as its people had hoped in the revival of business evident in other parts of Canada. Unemployment has created a problem for which the dominion government has provided no solution. There is an apprehension that unless there is a quick and marked improvement in economic conditions the province may be driven to default interest on at least some of its bonds, thereby impairing its capacity to borrow.

The powers that Mr. Patullo seeks are comparable to those granted by Congress to President Roosevelt. "A pint-size NRA," is the characterization applied by the Conservative opposition to the scheme. The Conservatives, like our own Republican leaders, object to any centralization of authority that they can not themselves control. The Patullo experiment will be an interesting one, even if it is not imitated elsewhere in the dominion. For the first time in the history of Canada since confederation a provincial government will be able to direct business, to limit production, to manage, develop, lease or sell natural resources, to make loans to municipalities and to industries, and generally to exercise autocratic powers for the period of one year.

The single system comparable to this in the North American division of the British Empire is the crown colony status established in Newfoundland as the only practicable alternative to bankruptcy and chaos. The difference between the two is that the British Columbia experiment can be terminated at the end of 12 months, while the Newfoundland experiment is designed to continue until the recovery of the island is completed, which may take a long time.—Brooklyn Eagle, March 19, 1934.

The Post Impressionist

But Who Knows Benes?

Postoffice, Monday.

Everybody in the diplomatic quarters of this diplomatic city is asking: "What will Czechoslovakia do?"

For it appears that (again) there has been, or is about to be, a European Crisis, with capital letters. And that (again) Czechoslovakia's geographic and political positions make her a Key Country, with more caps.

Everybody, moreover, says that the key to the Key Country is its perpetual minister of foreign affairs, Edouard Benes. So, when everybody asks what Czechoslovakia will do, what they mean is "What is Dr. Benes going to do?" They all want to inquire whether he will turn to Berlin, stay long at Rome or go back to Paris.

Well, the Post-Impressionist happens to be in a position to cast one illuminating ray upon these problems.

• • • •

Back in those happy carefree days before the World War, when Czechs were an oppressed minority and he was a busy little revolutionist who would travel as far as St. Petersburg if he thought that might advance the cause of freedom—even in those times, his closest friends never knew his mind. All they could be sure of was that he had considerable mind and himself knew it through and through. Today Dr. Benes, more than ever seeking the shadows as he grows more and more important, has all the mystery of a myth, all the efficacy of Mrs. Harris.

• • • •

Bright-eyed, tight-lipped, a visibly quick-in-the-body man is he, obviously rapid of brain. But he is a man who—able to speak Czech, French, German and great and little Russian, as well as another tongue or two—never says a word more than is absolutely necessary upon any subject, political or personal.

• • • •

A certain American correspondent resident abroad had talked with—or at—Dr. Benes for seven years; met him at partisan political gatherings, international conferences, across dinner tables.

"I do wish you talked English!" the correspondent once exclaimed.

Dr. Benes smiled.

Sometime later the correspondent was recalled to his newspaper's home office. In New York he met a Czech friend of the Czech statesman and remarked to the friend upon what beautiful French Dr. Benes speaks.

"Yes," was the reply, "but his English is also excellent."

• • • •

There was a time during which a possible change in Czechoslovakia's economic foreign policy excited more than one sort of speculation. Rumor whispered of some mysterious new deal that was to come out of Prague and save the country from the depression. One speculator "happened" to lunch with Benes and casually put the question.

"Exactly how does your finance minister say the depression started in Czechoslovakia?"

"I haven't asked him," said Benes. "What I wish he would tell me is how the depression is going to be stopped there."

• • • •

In the opening days of the Arms Limitation Conference politicians were anxious to know whether Benes would, as theretofore, espouse the French side. Some gossip had it that he might not. Until the time for his speech arrived, Benes' answer was to walk up and down the crowded lobby, apparently lost in meditation, but with his hands clasping, so that all the world could see the title on the wrapper:

"Can Europe Keep the Peace?"

• • • •

Somebody inquired of the book's author what he paid such a first-rate sandwich-man for such a first-rate advertisement. Said Frank Simonds:

"I know a better. The Aga Khan, the East Indian supposed to be the world's richest man, went to buy a copy of that volume this morning and found he hadn't enough money in his clothes to pay for it."

The bookseller—this was at a booth in the lobby—broke in: "That's not the worst of it. He humbly demanded that I'd trust him. Then, when he sent the money by messenger, he'd made a wrong count and sent 50 centimes too little."

It was then that we ventured: "Of course when Dr. Benes bought his copy, he was correct to the sou."

Whereupon that bookseller summed up the Benes mystery methods in a single paragraph.

• • • •

Said he:

"Whenever Dr. Benes comes to town, the newest American and English books on international politics appear on his bed-table at the hotel. The hotel servants tell me that each copy has pasted inside it one of those little labels bearing my shop's name, which, while wrapping it up for delivery to the customer, we always paste in every copy of every book we sell. Undoubtedly those books in Dr. Benes' possession were bought of us. But Dr. Benes himself never enters my place. He doesn't even send a note. He uses unknown intermediaries—doesn't want people to learn what political books he's reading. Why that man wouldn't be seen buying a newspaper at a kiosk, for fear somebody might suspect he was sympathetic with the sheet's editorial policy!"

• • • •

So here is our message upon the present, or arriving, European crisis—to all those Washington diplomats who would like to discover Dr. Benes' intentions:

We do not know what he is going to do. But we are acquainted with Dr. Benes and, basing our statement upon our ten years' acquaintanceship, we say solemnly and authoritatively that there is no use speculating about it.

Along the Potomac

With

Carlisle Bargeron

SCENES as distressing and as poignant as any in Longfellow's "Evangeline" are being enacted in the animal kingdom as the Government prepares for its second great massacre. Last year it was the little pigs that were turned under. Entire pig families were rent asunder; little pigs were torn from their mothers, and in many instances, mother pigs and papa pigs were separated never to see each other again.

BARGERON.

Now the governmental hatcheteers are out after the cows.

There has been much talk about there having been no bloodshed in our revolution. We Americans are a different and orderly people, it is said. Frankly, I am beginning to wonder if the revolutionaries aren't gradually working up to us.

• • • •

Manifestly, it would have been too shocking to our sensibilities had the revolutionaries started out with human massacres. For one thing, it would have called attention to what was happening. But to start out with the pigs, subsequently taking the cows and then gradually working on up is a more clever way of accomplishing the final result.

It is significant, I think, that the two dumbest families of our domestic animal kingdom have been selected as the first victims. Everybody knows that just about the biggest dumb bells we have are the pigs and the cows. All the little pigs seem to know is to go around eating and grunting while a cow, as any motorist will tell you, hasn't sense enough to get off the road.

And dumbness is anathema to the brain trust. It is but natural that in their exterminating process they should begin with the dumbest of the species. But they are moving so fast that I am afraid it won't be long now for the rest of us.

• • • •

It is for this reason that my heart goes out to the cows in their pending grief more so than it would otherwise.

Unlike the little pigs, they have had warning. When the word reached the pig world that the new deal was to turn them under they laughed merrily and said in their piggish way, "Oh, how absurd, the new deal wouldn't do anything like that." That's just what many of us are saying to warnings we have heard.

It developed, though, that the little pigs didn't know their new deal. Their confidence was utterly misplaced.

• • • •

The cows, with the knowledge of the pigs' experience, are taking no chances. They are doing what any of us would do under similar circumstances. All over the country, I understand, they are on the run, headed for the Mexican border in an effort to escape.

Their flight will undoubtedly be placed in song some day as "The Great Migration of 1934."

Thud, thud, thud, they are on the march, fleeing refugees from their native land; leaving behind all but personal belongings such as can be carried on their backs. The highways south of Chicago, I suppose, are blocked with great herds of them crossing from one pasture to another. And one may assume that in every pasture their numbers are being augmented as they explain to the surprised feeding herds upon whom they come that the new deal massacrers are at it again.

• • • •

Ah, this is, indeed, distress to contemplate. I have never known anybody more contented than the cows. The rain and the sun, the daisies of the field and the flies were all the same to them. A satisfied race that never complained. Now into their complacency has come a great grief.

I don't want to be disloyal, but I hope they make it. I hope they get to the border ahead of their persecutors. There they will find surcease on the desert sands. And maybe eventually they can get on the boat with Sam Insull.

New Rapidan Span To Avoid Crashes

Fredericksburg, Va., March 25 (Spl.).—A new bridge to replace the narrow structure now crossing the Rapidan River at Germanna Ford, 18 miles from this city on the road to Culpeper, will be constructed soon under supervision of the State highway department, which announces the low bid to have been placed at $43,199.50 by Cobb & Homewood, Inc., of Chapel Hill, N. C.

Built before the coming of automobiles, the bridge is too narrow for two cars to pass at a time, and several serious accidents have occurred on the curves approaching it, which will also be replaced.

St. Lawrence Seaway Battle Planned Anew

Chicago, March 25 (AP).—Confident that the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway treaty will be resubmitted by President Roosevelt to the Seventy-fourth Congress in January, the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Tidewater Association today mustered forces in attempts to bring about ultimate ratification.

Charles P. Craig, of St. Paul and Washington, executive secretary of the executive committee of the association, said the organization was launching an immediate campaign to dispel certain misunderstandings that he believed contributed to defeat of the treaty in the present Congress.

Baltimore Surgeon To Speak at U. of V.

Dr. Dean Lewis in Lecture This Evening.

Charlottesville, Va., March 25 (Spl.).—Dr. Dean Lewis, of Johns Hopkins University, president of the American Medical Association, will speak tomorrow at 8 p. m. in the University of Virginia medical school before a joint meeting of the University Medical Society and the Albemarle Medical Society.

His subject will be "Hypothesis: The Relation of Chemical Syndrones to Specific Cellular Changes." He will speak in the large amphitheater in the medical building.

Dr. Lewis is professor of surgery in Johns Hopkins University and for nearly ten years has been surgeon-in-chief of the Johns Hopkins Hospital.

No End of Books

By

Theodore Hall

YOU can't tell about fathers and sons. Sauce for one will like as not be wormwood for the other.

Our little story today, which I shan't pretend to explain, involves a father who was (aside perhaps from Robert M. La Follette, sr.) more pilloried than any other man in modern American politics, and a son who made the most famous name for a young man since the days of "Who struck Billy Patterson?" The sources are two recent and very different books.

• • • • •

On a spring day in 1918 several Government agents walked into a print shop here in Washington and ordered the proprietor to destroy the plates of a book. Wartime hysteria considered the book dangerous—it said some things about the sources of war and about special privilege which the people should not be allowed to see. Hammers smashed down upon the plates. The title of the book was "Why Is Your Country at War?" Its author was a Congressman from Minnesota.

He had been born in Sweden, had come to the States at the age of one. He grew up in the hard life of a Minnesota farm, worked as a laborer on a railroad, later as a brakeman. Bit by bit he educated himself. He practiced law and gained fame. He became a director of two banks. When he ran for Congress he was elected; he kept his seat for 10 years. Wilson wanted him on the War Industries Board, but by that time his opinions of finance in this country were well known—his was the seed of the momentous Pujo investigation. When a letter came from a New York banker saying that he was not to be on the board, it was the only time that his law partner heard anything approaching profanity from the lips of Charles Augustus Lindbergh, sr.

• • • •

That little book, such a bogey in 1918, now appears with the title "Your Country at War" (Dorrance, $1.75). We can take it more calmly these days, for much of what it says and suggests is implicit in the New Deal. Social history has almost caught up with this passionate, sincere, straight-thinking man.

When he writes: "Unhesitatingly, I declare it to be the most solemn duty of the State to establish a system to liberate mankind from the existing industrial slavery," we no longer hold our hands over our ears. When he writes: "The individual initiative developed to its highest is the ideal, but the work of attainment must be under circumstances to afford equality of opportunity," that truism no longer blinds us. Few intelligences are shocked by his plain statement: "The world presents the failure in some respects of the existing civilization • • • No one can question that the old order of things is what has run us off the track, and that a new plan of things must be worked out."

• • • •

But this was to be about a father and son. As I promised yesterday in the Sunday book page, reviewing Mary Childs Nerney's life of Edison, here is a footnote on Charles A. Lindbergh, jr.

He was a member, in 1929, of the Edison Scholarship Committee, along with Henry Ford, George Eastman, President Straton, of M. I. T., and Dr. Perry, head of Phillips-Exeter. Mrs. Nerney was their secretary.

This "billionaire committee" met at the Edison home one morning at 9:30 and started work, grading papers and answers. There was a lunch party on the lawn at noon; then they settled to it again. After dinner Edison came in and sat with them. Wives settled in corners and watched. The hours dragged on as the choice narrowed.

• • • •

Col. Lindbergh suddenly leaned forward. Up to that time, as a member of the committee later stated, he had "contributed nothing." Now he said: "Read that again."

The question and answer were read once more. Col. Lindbergh frowned. He looked over at his wife and said: "I don't like that boy's answer. I don't like it at all." Mrs. Lindbergh nodded approval.

The members of the committee exchanged glances; "they were puzzled by the heat of the Colonel's objection." Dr. Straton was haggard; Mr. Ford, whose regular bedtime was 9 o'clock, looked "like something the cat brought in." There was a prolonged discussion. "The Colonel talked more than he had all day." When they decided to call it an evening, two and a half hours after midnight, "he was still muttering."

In the morning there were more conferences, and the Colonel won his point. As a result, the boy "who led all the others by nearly 5 per cent lost the scholarship."

• • • •

The examination question which led to the flurry was this—"Is the present relationship of capital and labor reasonably fair?"

And what was the boy's answer which had so disturbed the son of the strong-minded gentleman from Minnesota?

In the words of Mrs. Nerney, who sat at the table, "the candidate had expressed mildly the opinion that a different distribution of wealth was inevitable in time; the signs pointed that way."

"The Last Ride Together."

The poem with this title by Browning is one of the greatest love poems ever written; because it shows how to lose. It is just the opposite of the expression "All's fair in love and war," which means, of course, that it is much better to win and disgrace yourself than it is not to get what you want. In "The Last Ride Together" a young man and a girl who have been out riding together every afternoon meet at the appointed place for their customary exercise, when the man is so overcome by the girl's beauty and charm that he asks her to marry him. She refuses; and at that moment the poem begins. I recommend the man's speech to all those who have been rejected.

I said "Then, dearest, since 'tis so,
Since now at length my fate I know,
Since nothing all my love avails,
Since all my life seemed meant for, fails,
Since this was written ends needs must be—
My whole heart rises up to bless
Your name in pride and thankness!
Take back the hope you gave—I claim
Only a memory of the same"

and then he asks her for the privilege of one more ride. The girl hesitates, for today there will be tension in the air. Yesterday and the day before, they were riding like comrades—now it is quite different. But she looks at him a moment and consents.

It is possible to show good sportsmanship in love as it is in athletic games. Many men are embittered by defeat, and they think the girl must somehow lack intelligence if she does not seize such an opportunity. Then there are others who attempt to console themselves by a cheap philosophy—"there are plenty of other fish in the sea." Not so our man here. He does not minimize the force of the blow. "All my life seemed meant for, fails." I therefore curse you, and curse the hour that brought us together? Oh, no! He blesses her name in pride and thankfulness. Those are brave words. I had rather be rejected by you than accepted by any one else; I shall always be proud and grateful for this association with you. And now, instead of going away in anger, suppose we ride together once more, as we had planned. Here are the horses, all saddled and bridled—come on!

Defeat is common enough in life; but the art of losing is a great art, and only great characters lose nobly and turn defeat into development. If a man behaves badly after he is rejected in any competition or ambition, then he proves by his conduct the wisdom of those who rejected him. But if he can lose like a gentleman, he has gained the greatest of all victories. And perhaps it is just possible that in an affair of love, the girl may be so impressed by such chivalry and devotion, that she may reconsider.

Look up the poem and read the last stanza.

Arab Leaders Fight For Pilgrim Region

Port Said, Egypt, March 25 (AP).—Reports from Hejaz, Arabia, were received today saying fighting for the possession of the Asir border region near Mecca had broken out between Ibn Saud and the Imam of Yemen.

The conflicts were simultaneous with the concentration of many thousands of pilgrims from all of the Moslem world in Mecca to visit Kaba, "the stone descended from heaven," and the tomb of the prophet.

Burglar Gets $100 Ring.

A diamond ring, valued at $100, was reported stolen yesterday from the home of Mrs. Carrie M. Cooling, 500 block of Taylor street northwest. The intruder forced a rear window.

Helium, Sun's Gift to Aviation, Found in 1868

Discovery of Dirigible Gas an Accident of Science.

Pasadena, Calif., March 25 (AP).—Helium, astronomy's gift to aviation, was found on earth 39 years ago this month.

The gas was first discovered on the sun during a total eclipse, Dr Robert S. Richardson, astronomer of the Carnegie Institution's Mount Wilson Observatory, pointed out today.

A chemist searching for it on earth came upon it years later, by accident. The allies "discovered" its use in aviation in 1914 when they peppered a zeppelin with incendiary bullets and it did not take fire.

"Before the World War," said Dr. Richardson, "helium was known as a rare gas which interested scientists because it was given off by radium and, next to hydrogen, was the lightest gas known.

"Its selling price then was $2,500 a cubic foot. Since the war, because of its nonexplosive property, it has been sought most eagerly in every country for use in balloons and dirigibles.

"In the last two years the United States Government has produced 11,000,000 cubic feet of it from helium-bearing gases at plants in Amarillo, Tex. The United States now has a monopoly of the world's supply."

Helium was discovered in India in 1868. Astronomers then were using for the first time a spectroscope, which divides light and its component colors. Observers of the eclipse saw a mass of gas shot out from the sun's surface—a bright yellow line they suposed to be the "D" line of sodium. J. Janssen, a Frenchman, in 1869 obtained definite evidence that the yellow line was not that of sodium, but one unknown.

Crash Brings Rum Seizure In Arlington

County Officers Take First "Bootleg" Since Repeal.

ARLINGTON COUNTY BUREAU OF THE POST.
Tel. Clar. 500. Clarendon, Va.

Arlington County's first seizure of illicit whisky since the State went wet last Thursday came yesterday when an automobile crashed into a telephone pole on the Washington-Richmond highway near Virginia Highlands. Six half gallons were seized by the police.

A man who said he was Harrison Corbert was captured by Policemen Edward Duncan and Ernest Miller after a chase of nearly a mile through the woods. The driver escaped.

Corbert is held at the county jail "for investigation."

George W. Washington, colored, of Holbrook's row, South Washington, is in Arlington County Jail, held in connection with the shooting of James Manns, also colored, of the same address.

According to police, Washington quarreled with Manns over money. The shooting followed.

Manns was taken to Emergency Hospital, Washington.

The annual oratorical contest of the Washington-Lee High School at Ballston will be held in the auditorium at noon Thursday, it was announced yesterday by the principal, S. P. Vanderslice.

Participants will compete for a medal offered by the school. Contestants and their subjects are:

Maxine Cardwell, "America's Contribution to Constitutional Government;" Courtney Hood, "The Declaration of Independence;" Betty Hulbert, "James Madison, Father of the Constitution;" Frank Davies, "Foundation of the Constitution," and James Alderson, "The Constitution of the United States."

Bus Report Waited In Prince Georges

Chamber to Get Utilities Data Tonight.

Important matters for discussion will come before the monthly meeting of the Prince Georges Chamber of Commerce tonight at 8 o'clock, in the police curtroom of the District Metropolitan Building, in Hyattsville.

A leading issue will be the report of the public utilities committee on progress to obtain improved street car and bus service and lower rates for Prince Georges area. Ralph W. Powers, chairman, recently called a joint meeting of the committee with representatives of organizations and municipalities in the county, to draw up recommendations.

The chamber's legislative committee will present its report on ways and means of improving the county police system.

A special committee of the chamber will report on a referendum from the United States Chamber of Commerce on "National Defense."

College Park Starts Improvement Drive

Steps have been taken by the College Park (Md.) Home and School Association for the removal of unsightly and insanitary dumps in the western section of the town. The Washington Suburban Sanitary Commission has been urged to take immediate action.

Possibility of constructing sidewalks along College avenue and along the Washington-Baltimore boulevard from the University of Maryland to College Heights is being considered by the streets and sidewalks committee of the association. Prof. S. S. Steinberg, chairman of the committee, declared that financing such improvements may prove difficult, since College Park is unincorporated. Abutting property owners could not be made to pay for the work, he said.

Virginia Students Rehearse 2 Plays

Charlottesville, Va., March 25 (Spl.).—The Virginia Players, student actors of the University of Virginia, have in rehearsal two productions to be given during April.

As a special attraction of Easter Week the players will offer their second "Virginia Reel." This revue was so well received last spring that a second edition is being given this year.

For presentation the latter part of April the Virginia Players are at work on "The Front Page," newspaper drama.

Opening of Deepest Oil Well Delayed by Mud

Binger, Okla., March 25 (AP).—Hundreds of hardy Oklahomans who braved cold and rain today in the hope of seeing the 9,982-foot Adak-Noc Wildcat of the Denver Producing & Refining Co. become the world's deepest commercial oil well, found drillers resting.

Bailing of a deep column of mud and oil from the shaft was suspended to await a new steel bailing line from Oklahoma City. The fluid remained 2,000 feet from the top of the hole.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips.

It's a Tough Life!

("After a 5,000-mile cruise devoted to a scientific study of the Sargasso Sea and its contents, a party of scientists have arrived back in New York. A most extensive study was made, enabling science to estimate the amount of Sargasso weed afloat."—News item.)

We're home from the seas,
A most studious crew;
Of data we bring back a mass. Oh,
We sailed at our ease
Having little to do
But study what's in the Sargasso.

Each morning we cruised
With a diligence great
On a ketch we were never afraid of;
We were never confused
As we looked deep and straight
To observe what the strange sea was made of.

We peered and we peered
With an all-seeing eye
As we sailed through the waters so tropic;
And the data we booked
Was important, oh my!
And the most of it quite microscopic.

Around the Azores
We pursued many leads;
Our vessel was big and quite ample.
We counted by scores
The most curious weeds
And we always took one as a sample.

Oh day after day
On the Caribbean blue
We trailed the Sargasso's old fauna
And if some got away
We just laughed for we knew
There was more of it just 'round the cauna.

The ways of each weed
And its habits, my boy,
We'd catalogue after a study;
We noted each breed
And we cried "Ship ahoy!"
As we made it our friend and a buddy.

Through tropical days
We would stare at the stream
And note everything we saw floating;
Oh, we'd gaze and we'd gaze
Far ahead and abeam
In our quest of fauna worth noting.

The Sargasso Sea
We inspected and probed;
(For science we labored like wizards.)
'Twas soft, you'll agree,
When scantily robed
And reading about those big blizzards.

L'envoi.

Now we're back and what bliss
To be home happily
And to hop on a local to Greenwich.*
Our conclusion is this:
The old Sargasso Sea
Is a swell lot of nautical spinach!

*Pronounced "Grin-itch," of course.

Premier Mussolini has a 60-year plan. It probably allows for the complete abolition of Do It Now placards.

There is this to be said about a 60-year plan: It gives you sufficient time to execute it and at the same time dope out the opposing bridge hands, locate the aces, catch up with your reading and take the car in to see what causes that rattle.

Corporal Can't Maintain Discipline If Orders Are Changed

By Robert Quillen

Let us suppose that a certain man, named John Doe, robs a bank and kills an employe who attempts to prevent his escape.

He is arrested; the grand jury hears witnesses and finds a true bill; the State's attorney is ready to prosecute.

So far, the business of punishing John Doe for his crime has cost the taxpayer very little.

Why increase the cost if nothing can be gained by it?

Why not discover in advance whether further action will serve only to shame the court and mock justice?

The State's attorney or some other official could say to the governor: "John Doe is accused of murder and robbery. Here is a summary of the evidence against him. Is it your intention to pardon him if we get a conviction?"

If the governor replied in the affirmative, the case could be dropped. John Doe liberated to continue the practice of his profession, and taxpayers saved a useless expenditure.

In all seriousness, it would be wiser to liberate a criminal without trial than to make a farce of justice.

Peace officers and the courts are made ridiculous when a higher authority can undo their work without reason or justification.

And when the machinery of justice is made impotent and ridiculous, criminals are invited to take what toll they will.

The governor of one State pardoned over 1,700 convicts in four years. That, perhaps, is a record; but the abuse of pardoning power is National, and no State is blameless enough to ridicule another.

There is abundant evidence to prove that liberated criminals return to crimes as a washed sow to her wallow.

To parole or pardon one of them is to say in effect: "I know that you are a professional criminal. You can not or will not earn your living in any honest business or trade or profession. Go, therefore, and prey on the public until you are caught again."

Not all convicts are habitual criminals, but all pardons encourage the scorn of law that makes crime a habit.

45 Measles Cases At Fredericksburg

Fredericksburg, Va., March 25 (Spl.).—Forty-five cases of measles have been reported to Dr. Lee Cooke, city health officer, who has ordered quarantine.

Dr. Cooke stated that in some instances no doctors were in attendance. He said he is having some trouble with quarantine violations.

The situation is not as yet alarming, Dr. Cooke stated.

Dr. D. W. Peters Meets Teachers at Manassas

Manassas, Va., March 25 (Spl.).—Dr. D. W. Peters from the State education department, Richmond, met teachers of Prince William County yesterday to discuss progress on the course of study in connection with the State-wide curriculum program.

This was the regular spring meeting for all county teachers.

Spanish Skipper Dies From Cruise Injuries

Galveston, Tex., March 25 (AP).—Capt. Francesco Garay, master of the Spanish Nervion Line motorship Mar Cantabrico, died today of injuries suffered aboard his vessel while at sea, according to advices received here.

The ship was en route from Baltimore to Galveston, but will put into Charleston, S. C., where Capt. Garay will be buried.

Tax on Foreign Oils Declared Recovery Blow

Economists Assert Levy Would Boost Living Cost of Masses.

Leading economists of American universities yesterday memorialized the Senate in opposition to the proposed 3 per cent tax on coconut oil and other vegetable and animal oils of foreign origin. A bill including the tax comes before the Senate shortly.

Dr. Warren M. Persons, former professor of economics at Harvard University, made public telegrams from 50 economists, characterizing the tax as "an unmitigated outrage," "an obstacle to recovery," "wasteful," "utterly unjust" and "an unwise and unjustifiable extension of protective policy."

The tax would raise the price of soap approximately 50 per cent, Dr. Warren said, listing the following reasons for concerted opposition to the measure:

It amounts to a tariff increase. Further restriction on imports—whether of vegetable or animal oils, or manufactured goods, will bring about retaliatory measures from other countries and will reduce the volume of our basic exports.

It is perversion of the protective principle to serve a private interest to the detriment of the consumers and at the expense of public health.

Increase in the cost of soap will decrease its use and seriously endanger private and public health.

It is equivalent to a sales tax upon a necessity, raising the cost of living to the masses, and to slowing down the pace and narrow the scope of recovery.

Cut in Interest, Dividend Rates Made by RFC

Action Is Announced to Conform With Credit Views of Roosevelt.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation announced yesterday a reduction in dividend and interest rates on preferred stock and capital notes in banks and insurance companies.

"In keeping with the President's views as to lower interest rates and with his approval," Chairman Jesse H. Jones said, "the RFC will reduce the rates to 4 per cent for five years from April 1, 1934. The rate after five years will be 5 per cent. At present a 4 per cent rate applies for three years to such preferred stock and capital notes as may be retired within that period.

"Believing that this added capital will serve a better purpose and be more helpful in the recovery program if employed by the banks without too great an incentive to repay within so short a period, and the Government being now able to borrow at such low rates, these dividend and interest rates are definitely fixed at 4 per cent for five years.

"Adjustments may be effected by the banks refunding their present capital notes with notes drawing the new rate, or in interest settlements. In the case of preferred stock, banks and insurance companies may, if they prefer to do so, amend their charters so as to conform to the new rates, or agreements may be entered into between the corporation and the issuing bank and insurance company covering the reduction.

"The corporation also will give self-liquidating borrowers the equivalent of a 4 per cent interest rate for five years from April 1, 1934, upon conditions to be approved by it, provided it owns the securities during that period. While the securities carry a greater rate than 4 per cent, adjustments will be made on a basis of 4 per cent net to the corporation."

Hunter Trials Will Attract Society Folk

April Calendar Fills With Gala Events for Racing Set.

Event of April 7 Will Draw Crowds From Over Nation.

April not only means spring with many gay and festive functions to be looked forward to, but to the racing enthusiasts it is a month filled with some of the most exciting events of the year such as the Point-to-Point races in Maryland and Virginia with the Maryland Hunt Cup on April 28, which is the Grand National of the United States and attended by people from all over the country.

However at the moment Washington is much more interested in the hunter trials which will be held April 7, at Bradley Farms, Md., which is an ideal spot as the course is laid over natural rolling country and can be seen by the spectators from start to finish.

A large number of local exhibitors are expected as well as a number of out-of-town entries from Maryland and Virginia, to take part in the four classes with the first scheduled to start at 1:45 p. m..

Col. Charles J. Scott is chairman and those assisting him are Mr. Moran McConihe, in charge of sale of tickets; Maj. John J. Bohn, Mr. Fenton Fadleey, Mr. J. J. Cotter, Mr. Robert Phillips, jr., Mr. Albert MacKenzie and Mr. Chester Gwinn.

Mrs. William C. Hanson is in charge of the luncheon committee and aiding her are Mrs. J. J. Bohn, Mrs. Charles J. Scott, Mrs. Claude Owen, Mrs. Wilfred Blunt, Mrs. Marshall Exnicios, Mrs. M. Robert Guggenheim, Mrs. Fred Sanderson, Mrs. James M. Grecar, Mrs. J. J. Cotter, Mrs. Marbury Stamp, Mrs. George Walker, Mrs. Harry Semmes, Mrs. R. Riddick, Mrs. Fenton Fadeley, Mrs. Charles Carrico, Mrs. C. D. Herron, Mrs. Robert Watson, Mrs. Melvin Hazen, Mrs. Hary McCabe, Mrs. John MacDowell, and a number of the debutantes and younger members of society.

Starting with April 7, every Saturday through the month has a race scheduled to take place which is of immense importance to the horse loving fans, and it is fortunate for those in Washington that they are all within driving distance.

Even May carries equally good events such as the Warrenton Gold Cup which will be run on the first Saturady in May and then is followed by the National Capital Horse Show, which Washington takes great pride in as it is one of the leading horse shows of the country.

Miss Coe Sets Her Wedding For May 19

She Will Become Bride of Signor Vitetti, Italian Diplomat.

Mr. and Mrs. William R. Coe, who have been at Cherokee Plantation, near Charleston, S. C., for several months, will reopen Plantation Fields, their estate at Oyster Bay, Long Island, on April 9.

Mr. Coe's daughter, Miss Natalie Mai Coe, whose engagement was announced in January to Signor Leonardo Vitetti, Counselor of the Italian Embassy in London, has selected as the date of her marriage, Wednesday, May 19, at Plantation Fields.

Miss Coe's mother, the late Mrs. Coe, was a daughter of Mr. Henry H. Rogers, Standard Oil capitalist, and she is the niece of Lady Fairhaven, of London.

Signor Vitetti has been in the Italian diplomatic service for many years and during his career he spent several years in Washington as Secretary of the Italian Embassy.

The Washington Alumnae Chapter, of Zeta Tau Alpha Fraternity, made final plans for its province convention at the March chapter meeting, held at the home of Mrs. John Lambert. The convention will be held at the Hotel Mayflower on April 14-15. Mrs. Laurie Hess, who has held the office of province president for the last four years, will preside.

Delegates and guests from Duke University, Randolph-Macon College, the University of South Carolina, and George Washington University, will attend, in addition to alumnae from nearby cities. The Washington Alumnae Chapter will be represented by Mrs. John Warlick, delegate, and Mrs. John Thompson, jr., alternate delegate. Mrs. Rene Reixach will act as chairman of the committee on arrangements, and Miss Beatrice A. Clephane has been chosen as toastmistress. Mrs. W. Paul Briggs, president of the Washington Alumnae Chapter, will preside at the luncheon.

Mrs. Tibbett Will Be Guest In Lyric Box

Will Hear Husband in Metropolitan Series at Baltimore.

When Lawrence Tibbett sings the role of the elder Germont, father of lovesick Alfredo, in "La Traviata" at the Lyric April 11, Mrs. Tibbett will be in the audience that will witness his melodic intervention in the romance of the operatic Lady of the Camellias.

Mrs. Tibbett will hear the singing of the Verdi opera from Mr. Huber's box. She was invited by Mr. Huber to be a box guest for the performance of Elizabeth Rethberg in "Madame Butterfly" on the opening night of the Metropolitan's Baltimore season, and for the performance of De Luca and Fleisher in "Gianni Schicchi" and Goeta Ljungberg in "Salome" on the second night.

Engagements will keep Mr. Tibbett in New York until early April 11, however, and Mrs. Tibbett will wait and journey to Baltimore with her husband.

It is of interest to note that Giuseppe De Luca, whose interpretation of the title role in "Gianni Schicchi" in the Metropolitan's revival of that opera, is one of the greatest pieces of operatic buffoonery in the history of that organization, was once cast in the Germont role that Lawrence Tibbett will sing with Lucrezia Bori on the final night of the Metropolitan's lyric season.

De Luca sang the role when Mme. Hempel was the Violetta, and Giacomo Domacco sang the role of Alfredo that will be assigned to the young American tenor Richard Crooks when the Metropolitan next sings "La Traviata" in Baltimore.

Eaves, son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Eaves, both of this place, were married in the Methodist Episcopal Church Thursday night by the pastor, the Rev. T. W. Lloyd. Miss Ruth Eaves, her sister, was maid of honor and Mr. Clarence Fogle, of Washington, was best man.

Mr. Nelson Kerchner and Mr. Charles Zimmerman were ushers and Miss Mary Nicodemus played the wedding march. The bride has been assistant executive secretary of the Children's Aid Society and assistant probation officer. Mr. Eaves is in business. Following a wedding trip they will be at home in Walkersville after April 1.

Miss Snyder Weds Dr. H. S. Cawthorne

Ceremony Is Performed in Mount Rainier Church.

The Mount Rainier, Md., Methodist Episcopal Church South was the scene of a pretty wedding Saturday when Miss Isabell Catherine Snyder, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Snyder, became the bride of Dr. Hugh Stockman Cawthorne, son of Mrs. Lucile Cawthorne, of Mount Rainier. The Rev. Harry Baker officiated.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a gown of white satin made on princess lines, with long sleeves which were ornamented with a single row of tiny satin buttons extending from the shoulder to the wrist. A long tulle veil was caught in a deep cap and held in place by orange blossoms. She carried a bouquet of white roses.

The bridesmaids, Misses Marjorie Rosenfield, Ruth Warman and Elinore Cawthorne, wore gowns of green, yellow and blue organdie, respectively. Each carried a shower bouquet of spring flowers.

Miss Dorothy Snyder, sister of the bride, was maid of honor and wore a gown of pale pink net. She also carried a shower bouquet of spring flowers.

Little Miss Ruth DeWoddy, dressed in blue organdie, was flower girl.

Mr. George Cawthorne, brother of the bridegroom, was best man, and the ushers were Mr. George Lovell, Mr. Richard Williams and Mr. Henry Harmes.

Nuptial music was rendered by Mrs. Carrie Foxwell, pianist, and Misses Margaret Smith and Ina Sager, violinists.

The bride's mother, Mrs. Fred Snyder, was gowned in black lace and wore a shoulder bouquet of sweet peas.

Mrs. Lucile Cawthorne, mother of the bridegroom, wore a gown of dark blue crepe and wore sweet peas.

Woman's Status In New York Has Improved

Professional Discrimination Growing Less, Says Mrs. Leach.

WOMEN in New York are gradually rising above the prevalent discrimination against them, according to Mrs. Henry Goddard Leach, who has made a special study of women in industry.

Interviewed during her recent visit to Washington, where she presided over one of the sessions of the National League of Women Voters, Mrs. Leach spoke frankly of the difficulty encountered by many women to keep positions even after they had proved their ability.

"Married women, particularly, have been victims of discrimination," she asserted. "For instance, a year ago in Syracuse the mayor promulgated a measure whereby all married women were asked to resign their teaching positions. This example was followed ruthlessly in a number of other cities until it was discovered that some of the most efficient teachers were being replaced by those of far less ability."

The teaching profession, however, is not the only one involved. "One need go no farther than New York City to discover difficulties encountered by women lawyers," said Mrs. Leach. "And in this particular profession married women have no more trouble than those who are not married."

Since women lawyers are not admitted to the New York Bar Association, they are accorded little consideration by men in the profession, according to Mrs. Leach. "The significant thing about this state of affairs," she said, "is the older men in the profession are, for the most part, willing for women lawyers to have equal rights. The younger men are the ones who object; and the reason is perfectly obvious: they are afraid of the competition that would result if women in the profession had equal chances with men.

"In medicine, women in New York have won an enviable place for themselves. "Many hospitals throughout the state have women internes, and in most cases women physicians are accorded the same privileges as men."

In the field of journalism, also, women are encountering far less difficulty in point of discrimination than they did a dozen years ago, Mrs. Leach pointed out. "This is probably because women have made themselves so necessary that their demands receive more consideration," she said. "However, I am confident that women will eventually have equal rights in every industry which they may care to enter. Anyone who considers the remarkable progress of women in the last twenty years can scarcely fail to realize that the feminine contingent in business will not be content until it is accorded full rights."

Mrs. Leach is chairman of the Department of Efficiency in Government, of the New York League of Women Voters.

Fiction World Features Men

Survey of Best-Sellers Shows Heroines in Abeyance.

It's a man's world—so far as the leading parts are concerned—in the realm of make-believe romance.

A survey of the best-sellers since 1875, made by Edward Weeks of the Atlantic Monthly for the Institute of Arts and Sciences of New York, reveals that a majority of the novels achieving wide popularity in the last half century have featured heroes rather than heroines.

Since women are the chief readers of best sellers, men ambitious for feminine adulation might obtain some pointers from Mr. Weeks' list.

Near the top of the list are Gene Stratton Porter's youthful heroes, Freckles and Laddie. Ben-Hur is high up in the scale as is also Tom Sawyer. And close behind them is the Virginian, cowboy idol of every woman whose reading dates back to the early part of the century. David Harum, Huckleberry Finn and the upstanding sons of the soil made famous by Harold Bell Wright are well up on the list. Trailing Dan Matthews and Richard Carvel is Tarzan and a little farther down are listed Zane Grey's big outdoor boys.

Only toward the end of the list do the heroes begin to get modern. The Sheik is fourth from the bottom and at the very end is the egoistic Philip of Maugham's "Of Human Bondage."

The first heroine to appear on the list is Gene Stratton Porter's "Girl of the Limberlost." Harold Bell Wright's Barbara Worth is next and Pollyanna is third. Trilby and Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm come along close together.

I Do Not Dare.

By Katherine Smith.

When thought, too white, becomes a cloud
That blots the shifting green of love;
When mind, too strong, becomes a shield
Against the weaker weapon of Despair; when eyes are bright and cold
With vision, then I dare not view
The strength of loveliness that hides
Within the pulsing heart of you.

Gallant Lady.

LOVELY ISABELLA Greenway, the fluffy-haired Representative from Arizona who has taken Washington—speaking both Capitally and Capitol-ly—by storm ever since she landed here, had a birthday last week when her dear friend, Mrs. Franklin Roosevelt, gave her a party at the White House.

* * * *

About the same time, the much-discussed bonus bill was before Congress and voted upon. Mrs. Greenway, who usually has voted according to Administration, voted for the bill and against the Administration.

* * * *

It is rumored that her daughter in Chicago called her on long distnce—wished her a happy birthday—and asked her why she voted in favor of the bill.

"My dear," (Mrs. Greenway is reported to have replied) "you never have had friends who were really hungry—I have."

Listen to This.

MADAME SAITO sipped her tea in the stately blue and gold dining room of the Japanese Embassy the other day. She thought for a moment before answering the query of a guest, sitting on the golden brocade sofa next to her. Then she said:

"Yes. The Japanese people do like Puccini's opera very much. They think 'Madame Butterfly' is very beautiful. It is said, of course, but it has such exquisite music!"

* * * *

Her vis-a-vis suggested that quite a few Americans are not too keen about the theme of John Luther Long's story on which the opera is based.

"Ah, yes. But then—" Madame Saito shrugged her shoulders in their well-fitted Navy chiffon gracefully, "Every nation has something like that!"

* * * *

She took another sip and added, a sterner light coming into her expressive dark eyes:

"But the Japanese people do not like the 'Mikado.'"

"They don't?" The listener was surprised. "'The Mikado' is perhaps the most successful of all the operettas written by that famous British team—W. S. Gilbert and Sir Arthur Sullivan. It is especially popular in America—perhaps because it is written in so definitely satiric a vein."

"Yes, perhaps!" Madame Saito was terse. "Our people do not like it," she repeated with quiet emphasis.

* * * *

The odd part about it all is, this very work has been suggested for performance in connection with a civic celebration under Washington's own cherry blossoms—if winter ever goes.

* * * *

The new Ambassador from Japan and his family are to pose on this occasion as honor guests against the blossoms which make such gorgeous garlands for the Tidal Basin each spring.

Man Now Social Fifth Wheel As Hen Parties Gain Impetus

Washington Women Leaders Defend System of Feminine Dining and Wining Even Though Sirens and Visiting Europeans Call the Practice Insipid.

THE HEN PARTY is a growing American institution. Men may laugh at it, sirens scorn it, Europeans marvel at it, but it is destined to sweep on to ever-greater conquests of femininity.

So declare Washington women, who are rallying warmly in defense of what now promises to become an old American custom.

The recent party of the Women's National Press Club, attended by 500 women, gowned, coiffed and beautified to the limit of their time and money, focused the eyes of the Nation upon the social event for women only. It brought to the fore again a question repeatedly asked in recent years by foreign visitors: "How can a woman get a thrill out of a party at which there is no man's vitalizing presence?"

Not only foreigners but many Westerners ask that question. For the East, and particularly Washington, is the stronghold of the hen party. Here women foregather not only for bridge and food, but for talk—actually talk.

Why do they do it?

For mental stimulation, says Mrs. Genevieve Forbes Herrick, president of the Women's National Press Club.

Have Grand Time.

"Intelligent women can have a grand time getting together," she asserted. "I think that women's parties are especially successful in Washington, for nearly every woman here either has a job of her own that interests her, or she takes an intelligent interest in her husband's job.

"These women gain much from getting together and talking. One of the most delightful parties I ever attended was a dinner party given by Mrs. Emily Newell Blair for women only. After the party I rode home with Madame Saito, wife of the Japanese Ambassador. She was amazed at the gathering. 'I had never known that women could be so clever and happy together,' she said.

Secret of Success.

Mrs. Richard Hogue, of the American Association of University Women and the League of Women Voters, declares she is a specialist on hen parties and thinks they are "fine."

"Of course, the affair has to be gay," she said. "A party atmosphere, good food and smart clothes help a woman's party along immensely. And much depends on the women, too. They have to be intelligent women, with interests of their own—women who don't depend on sex appeal to furnish the greatest interest in life."

Mrs. Hogue said she believed these parties were typical of American women because the women of this country were self-reliant and had interests of their own in which men are not included. "Their parties have grown out of their activities," she asserted.

Mrs. George M. Eckels, of the Woman National Democratic Club, thinks women have their own parties in America because the men aren't socially trained.

"Most American men feel they are making concessions to go to formal parties and afternoon affairs," Mrs. Eckels said, "so women have learned to entertain themselves. And as a general rule these parties are stimulating and interesting.

"I much prefer dressing up for women to dressing up for men, because to tell you the truth, most men are terribly dumb about clothes. But women can really appreciate a beautiful outfit."

Pioneer Custom.

Mrs. Emily Newell Blair, prominent author, said with conviction:

"Of course women enjoy their own parties. If they didn't, they wouldn't have so many of them. Women have interests of their own, they are concerned with the vital problems of the day, and they like to talk things over among themselves.

"Probably the reason these parties have grown up in this country is that ours is a pioneer country. The men have always had to work and have not had time to cultivate the social graces. I think that men are expert and interested party-goers only in countries with aristocratic tradition."

Responsibility Of Depression Laid to Women

Permitted It and Should Cure It, Says Former Congresswoman.

Women permitted the depression to happen.

And women must see to depression's cure.

Women failed at their job—that of safeguarding the future of children—when they tolerated the development of the present economic crisis, according to this country's congresswoman, Jeanette Rankin.

"Hunger in the midst of plenty—that was woman's fault," the diminutive, dynamic feminist, citizen of Georgia, Montana and Washington, declared, when in Washington to address the Capital City Forum.

"Woman's great work in this world is to take care of children. When they don't do that—they're failures.

"Women have been to long indifferent and asleep to the underlying causes which bring about economic effects, making for the security or the demoralization of mankind.

"Had the women of our generation anticipated the inevitable results of certain economic trends, and acted on the knowledge, the full disaster of this present depression would never have developed," she said.

"Safeguarding the security of the race is woman's job more than man's," she argued.

"Women," she said, "are used to the problem of fair distribution of commodities in the home. Why shouldn't they have a voice in the National program of distribution? Unless they shoulder this responsibility now, they can be blamed for failure of recovery efforts."

The cause of peace is Miss Rankin's particular contribution to future generations of children, she believes. The tears she shed over this country's entrance in the World War gained wider publicity than the fiery oratory of all the men.

The pioneer Congresswoman has no ambition to return to her former seat on Capitol Hill. She feels she can do more constructive work on the outside. She watches with interest the activities of her successors, and is generous in her praise of their achievements.

But her hobby today is farming. She has a place in Georgia, where she carries on endless experiments. She has a car, and she drives it herself, on lecture tours across the continent. She divides her time between Washington, Georgia, and Mazula, in Montana—whose people sent her to Congress.

Indians Must Have Used Purple Rouge

Cosmetic Box Containing Paints Excavated by Archeologists.

Lafollette, Tenn., March 24 (AP). A new shade of purple, with which men of a forgotten Indian tribe probably painted their faces in the misty past, has been dug up by scientists.

Archeologists excavating an ancient temple near the Norris Dam site found an earthen bowl which appears to be a cosmetic box. It is divided into sections containing paints of many colors. Among them is the purple, of a shade unknown to archeologists in this section.

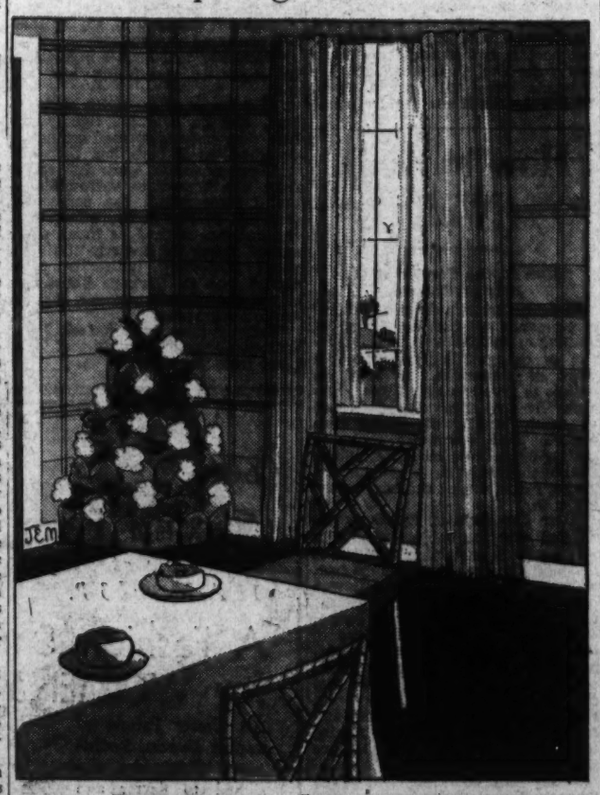
Scientists making a survey for the Tennessee Valley Authority reported the discovery. The temple, found on the Powell River and said to have dated back to the fifteenth century, was uncovered under 8 feet of soil. It is believed to have been built by some tribe which preceded the Cherokees in this area.

The paints were well preserved. The absence of any colored decorations in the temple ruins led scientists to believe the colors were used in decorating the faces of warriors or medicine men.

Prof. W. S. Webb, in charge of the survey, said originally the temple probably had a thatched roof. The wooden parts of the building were burned centuries ago. River sediment then covered the ruins.

Eight Indian skeletons have been taken from a cave near the river. About the bones clung fragments of a rough twine fabric.

New Wall Paper and Curtains Give Spring Tonic to Rooms



By Jo Ellen Maxson.

Red and white, gold and cream, gay colors and bold colors . . . it's going to be a big year for wall papers. Fabric houses have followed the trend and have designed smart new drapery materials to complete the ensemble for the backgrounds of rooms.

A change in walls and curtains is always a tonic. The wall papers and fabrics are designed in patterns and colors that complement, not repeat each other.

Old furniture will take a new lease on life if placed against one of the fresh new wall papers, and crisp, harmonizing draperies will give a modern tempo to the whole room.

Plaid is one of the dominant notes in this season's decoration. For a spring breakfast room walls of bright royal blue plaid on a white background, white woodwork, curtains of royal blue chintz with a fine white pin stripe, and furniture of white rattan would start the day off in a gay mood.

For a vivacious game room is wall paper with gallant red ships and compasses on a white background. Homespun curtains in red and white checks accentuate the color scheme.

For the colonial bedroom is a quaint Wedgewood blue wall paper with a field flower motif in bright spring colors. The draperies are of Wedgewood blue glazed chintz tufted in cream.

Miss Maxson will be glad to give individual help with home decorating problems. Write her in care of The Washington Post. If you wish to consult with her, call National 4205 for an appointment.

Men Will Take Colorful Part In This Year's Easter Parade

Man will return to much of his primitive glory in this year's Easter parade. In fact women are likely to find themselves in the position of little brown hens while their husbands swagger along in brighter colors than they have worn for nearly a decade.

All men with any sense of style will shed their dark blue and gray suits and blossom forth in light tans, grays and blues. Hats will be light tans, grays and greens, and scarfs and ties will be striped and plaid and plenty gay. Solid colors in haberdashery are out, say those who know.

The older men will be as gay in their attire as the young ones, whether they are on the beach, the golf course or in business office.

The psychological reason for the color era is the feeling that the depression is past. In recent years men have stuck to dark clothing because it was economical.

The renaissance in color in men's clothing will surpass anything of the last seven or eight years, say haberdashers. It will necessitate much buying of new attire, for the time is past when a man can brush up last spring's suit and get by with it. The color—or lack of it—will betray him.

Because She Is a Woman The Chief Clerk Is Barred

In Board of Inspection and Survey of Navy Department, She Is First Woman to Hold that Position; Considers Government Grand Boss.

Equal opportunities for all classes and conditions of men and women—that seems to be the keynote of Government work. Women have proved time after time they are capable of making the most of those opportunities. One woman in particular has climbed from an extremely humble job to an important executive position.

This is the seventh in a series of articles telling of interesting Government positions held by women.

By Virginia Lee Warren.

THERE IS JUST ONE thing wrong with her job, according to Miss Alice W. Flynn, chief clerk for the board of inspection and survey, Navy Department. Miss Flynn thinks it is a shame that she is not permitted to go on at least one boat while it is being inspected or given a trial run by the board for which she works.

"It's because I'm a woman," she explained yesterday afternoon at her office in the Navy Building. "For years there has been a rule that no woman may be on a Navy boat while it is being inspected or taken on a trial run."

A few years ago this rule would not have affected the chief clerk because, until 1930, the chief clerk was always a man. It was in that year that Miss Flynn received her appointment.

She had entered Government work in 1919 as an assistant file clerk in the department where she is now chief clerk. Today her work is mostly "on paper." For two or three months before a boat is given its trial run at Rockland, Me., or Provincetown, Mass., Miss Flynn carries on voluminous correspondence with the shipyard building the boat. Through her office, arrangements for the trial run are made. After the run is over there are records to be written and filed and computation charts to be made by the two draftsmen on Miss Flynn's staff.

"The pressure of work is very uneven," said the first woman chief clerk for the board of inspection and survey. "This last year only a few ships were ready for trial runs. But after the first of next month we'll be rushed to death until fall. About six ships will be given their trials this spring and summer."

Each Navy boat is inspected every three years, explained Miss Flynn. That means more correspondence, reports and charts.

Considers Job Pleasant.

"Exciting incidents? I'm afraid there aren't any in my work," said the chief clerk. "My job is pleasant, but it does get monotonous sometimes. Now, if I could only go on one of the boats—"

Her voice trailed off into silence as she contemplated just how exciting that experience would be.

Miss Flynn has sailed the ocean, but that was on a regular passenger boat. Two years ago she spent eight weeks in Europe. She likes to travel, but finds reading just as educational and diverting. For several winters she has belonged to a small club that studies the lives and works of authors.

A young woman's chances of promotion in her work lie within herself, whether she is working for the Government or for a privately owned concern, believes Miss Flynn.

"Personally, I've found that the Government is a grand boss," she declared. "And I've had a good many bosses. I was living in Auburn, N. Y., when I got my first job. It wasn't much—keeping books for a grocery store. But you know how small towns are. The girls that have the good jobs hang on to them until they die."

Worked in Department Store.

From the grocery Miss Flynn went to the offices of several department stores—she has forgotten the exact number—and then became a bookkeeper and telegraph operator for a branch office of Western Union.

"But my mother kept urging me to take the Civil Service exam. My sister had been in Washington with the War Department for a year and mother thought it would be nice if the rest of the family could come to Washington, too. So I took the exam and received an appointment as assistant to the file clerk of the Navy Department's board of inspection and survey."

Miss Flynn began her work in the Capital in September, 1919. When the file clerk left his position in June of the following year, she stepped into his place, remaining there until she was made chief clerk. Now she has a staff of seven under her direction.

"It's all very nice," said Miss Flynn. "But I still hope to get on one of the Navy's boats while it is being taken for a trial run."

Discipline Won't Affect Youthful Alcohol Addicts

Children's Bureau Bulletin Urges Parents to Set Good Example.

If your child drinks, don't preach to him. Don't moralize, and don't curtail his freedom. Instead, try to educate him to temperate habits. Above all, set a good example yourself.

These suggestions for parents who must deal with the problem of juvenile drinking are contained in a new bulletin entitled "Guiding the Adolescent," released today for general distribution by the Children's Bureau.

The bulletin, dealing with the modern problems of youth, was written for the bureau by Dr. Douglas A. Thom, director of the habit clinics of Boston and director of the department of mental hygiene in the department of mental diseases of Massachusetts.

In the section on "drinking," Dr. Thom says:

"If the adolescent is introduced to alcohol, it is invariably through his social activities, and his continued use of it is likely to be a symptom of some inadequacy and instability. For the less courageous, those who feel inferior, it is the most dangerous weapon with which they can play, as it temporarily bolsters up their courage, gives them a transient sense of well-being and a false sense of importance, and relieves them of certain painful inhibitions only to leave them pitifully weak and helpless without it."

Dr. Thom says that "rarely can the problem be adequately met with disciplinary measures, deprivation of freedom or moralizing tactics." Education and good example he suggests as better methods of procedure.

Modern youth is commended by Dr. Thom for the wisdom with which it has conducted itself in the face of "unbounded opportunities for liberty." He says such conduct should deserve "more respect and less criticism" from adults than it has received.

Makes History at Maryland U.

Mrs. John L. Whitehurst, first woman to be appointed to the board of regents of the University of Maryland, will preside at the Maryland Day exercises this afternoon in the Coliseum in College Park.

Woman Regent Presides Today

Mrs. John L. Whitehurst Represents U. of M. at Exercises.

History will be made today when Mrs. John L. Whitehurst, only woman member of the board of regents of the University of Maryland, presides at the Maryland Day exercises at the Coliseum at College Park. Since the university came into being as a land grant college in the early part of the last century no woman has ever represented it as a regent.

Mrs. Whitehurst, widely known civic and club leader of Baltimore, was recently appointed one of the nine regents of the university by Gov. Albert C. Ritchie. Her appointment followed a 10-year campaign on the part of women's organizations of the State to have a woman appointed on the board. Since becoming a regent she has been assigned to half a dozen important committees in connection with the activities of the university.

Mrs. Whitehurst is a former president of the Maryland Federation of Woman's Clubs. She is a member of the university hospital board and was State director of woman's work in the NRA.

At the exercises this afternoon Mrs. Whitehurst will introduce Senator Millard E. Tydings, the chief speaker.

These Cottons, Smartly Styled, Sell for Little

They Come in Everything From Sporty Shorts to Formals.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

The newly opened cotton shop in a downtown store is a real dare to the spirit of economy. Any woman who enters finds herself surrounded on three sides by such a variety of alluring frocks that it's virtually impossible to depart without one on her back and two in her hand.

Here at last is a haven where a woman can purchase a smart frock for as little as $2.95—or as high as $22.50. Everything from sporty shorts and blouses to perfect dreams of evening dresses may be found.

Striped shorts, checked blouses, seersuckers, linens, and piques outlaw a woman's determination to merely "drop in for a look." Tailored dresses in mannish styles made from shirting materials tempt the business woman who despite a stubborn winter looks ahead to the inevitable scorching summer.

Cotton prints, pique voiles, embroidered voiles, plaid gingham, lace cords present an infinite variety for playtime and dress-up occasions.

One rack is given over entirely to irresistible evening frocks, riots of ruffles and ribbons. These will give the sophisticate a sweet and girlish demeanor, and will accentuate the charm of the woman who is naturally ultra-feminine.

There is, too, quite a selection of the tailored pique evening cloaklets, some of them fashioned after the dress suit vest idea, others longer and less extreme.

Fasten Down Those Orientals.

Scatter rugs, which are forever slipping out of place and tripping people up, may be successfully attached to floors where they can continue to be beautiful without being dangerous.

A local shop has a liquid preparation that looks guileless enough, but applied to the bottom of a rug it works wonders. It acts as a glue that puts a rug in its place. It's noninflammable, odorless and absolutely harmless to rugs and floor alike.

One fond parent reports that she discovered it was the only method that successfully kept Junior from turning her rare Persians into magic carpets on which he slid and skidded from one corner of the room to another or sledded down the polished staircase.

Mexican Stripes.

Pure linen handkerchiefs with beautifully hand-rolled edges are a mass of stripes in a dozen bright Mexican colors.

Let those who will pine over wearing dark suits while others sport new spring clothes. But far wiser is she who buys herself two bright 'kerchiefs and makes a stunning bow for her blouse with one and carries the other in her hand. Which will all go to prove it sometimes takes very little to accomplish a lot. (This with apologies to Pollyanna.)

Silk Hunting Scenes.

Square silk scarfs with hand-blocked English hunting scenes cost more than most scarfs, and are worth more, too.

These, on sale at a Connecticut avenue shop, are made of the finest, softest silk available. They're designed in yellow, brown and red, against black print figures.

Whether they are used as kerchief, wall print, or table cover, they are grand, luxurious-looking silks.

To Brighten Dark Days.

Shops are showing a number of attractive means for brightening up winter suits and frocks.

There are those delightful bag and beret sets in a downtown store. These are knit from some kind of coarse shiny cord into perky little berets which can be worn one way as well as another, and small hand purses in pouch style. They come in blue, red, brown, black, and yellow.

Two dollars for the whole set.

They Keep Clothes Nicely.

For the hundreds of women who do not enjoy the blessing of a cedar closet in their homes, there are the new cedarized garment bags.

These are made of a heavy durable paper, with an inner white lining scented strongly with cedar. They fasten so securely down the sides and across the top the merest specks of dust can not filter through.

Some of these are made in extra large sizes to fit heavy winter coats.

Pigs For Children.

There's a new little pig game in an F street shop. It includes a stamp pad, some stampers, and a box of crayons — simple equipment but capable of keeping a child amused for a couple of hours.

The idea is, of course, to stamp pictures of the little pigs on the pad, and then with the crayons color them any way at all. Besides being a lot of fun, it's the sort of a thing that develops a child's sense of color and artistic originality.

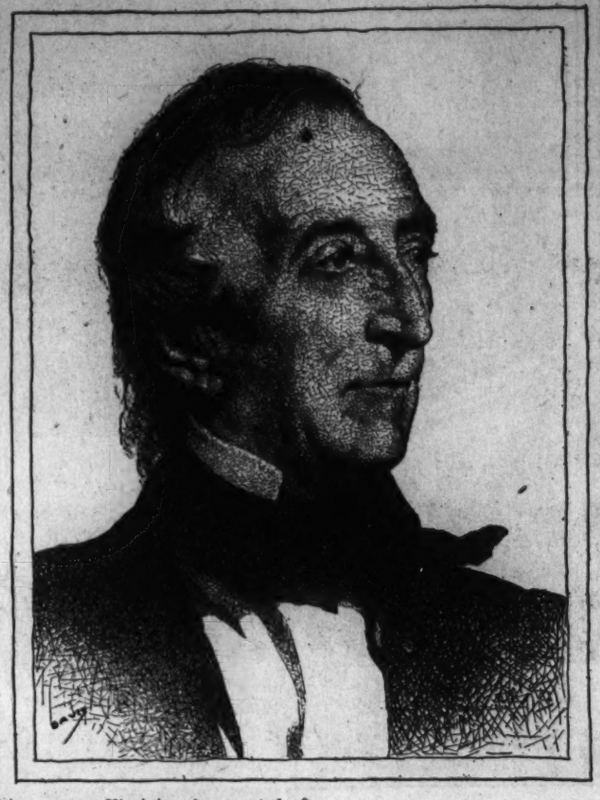
Half-Forgotten Romances of American History

John Tyler—Letitia Christian



When John Tyler was a promising young Virginian he courted Letitia Christian with the first and only love letter written to the lady of his choice. She capitulated four months later. It wasn't long before the handsome young couple came to the Nation's Capital, there to mingle with the brilliant social and political existence of that era. By the time they came to inhabit the White House, Letitia Tyler was a chronic invalid, but the graciousness and charm of her personality have made her remembered as one of the outstanding First Ladies.

Beautiful Letitia Christian Was a Belle of the Old Dominion.

By Elisabeth E. Poe.

On December 5, 1912, a certain Virginia lawyer and gentleman, John Tyler by name, took his long quill pen in his hand and composed his first and only love letter to the lady of his choice, a belle of the Old Dominion, Letitia Christian.

In this epistle, quaint, sincere and, as another commemorator has written, "indicative of the delicate tone and exalted purity of the social structure and civilization that surrounded them and under whose happy influences they were born and reared" John Tyler, afterward a President of the United States, wrought so favorable an impression upon the young lady that within within four months they were married.

"Although I could not entirely obtain your permission to write to you," the writer declared, yet I am well aware that you will not be displeased at my exercising a privilege so valuable to one standing in the relation that I do to you. To think of you and to write you, are the only sources from whence I can derive any real satisfaction during my residence in this place. The prerogative of thinking of those we love, and from whom we are separated, seems to be guaranteed to us by nature, as we can not be deprived of it either by the bustle and confusion of a town or by the important duties that attach to our existence. Believe me, my L., that this observation has been completely verified by me since I last saw you, for although deafened by noise, and attentive to the duties of my station, yet you are the subject of my serious meditations and the object of my fervent prayers to heaven. From the first moment of my acquaintance with you, I felt the influence of genuine affection; but now, when I reflect upon the sacrifice you make to virtue and to feeling, by conferring your hand on me, who have nothing to boast of but an honest and upright soul, and a heart of purest love, I feel gratitude superadded to affection for you. Indeed, I do esteem myself most rich in possessing you * * *"

A Rare Idyll.

There was more to the letter but this portion of it shows the depth of affection which existed between John Tyler and Letitia Christian. It was an idyll of the Old Dominion, one of those perfect relationships rarely obtained which remain traditions when they do appear.

John Tyler was born in post-Revolution days, on March 29, 1790. His father was of English descent, prominent in the affairs of the Old Dominion and one of its governors. A student at historic William and Mary College, public service attracted John Tyler's attention and he entered the Virginia State legislature soon after he reached his majority, in 1811. In 1813, he raised a company for the defense of Richmond against the British. But the invaders never reached that far and his company was disbanded after a month of service.

A firm follower of Thomas Jefferson when he entered the National Congress in 1816, his service was memorable in this regard.

The same year that saw the birth of John Tyler, in Cedar Grove, New Kent County, Robert Christian and his wife, Mary Brown Christian, found new happiness in the birth of a daughter, named Letitia, on November 12. The families of the two children were friendly and no doubt when the two mothers met they chatted of John and Letitia, without dreaming their lives would be thrown together in such a manner their names would remain in American history, he as President and she as one of the gracious coterie of First Ladies of the Land.

Little Letitia loved the plantation life at Cedar Grove. At night she would drift off to sleep to the soothing music of Mammy singing:

"O, hear dat lumberin' thunder
A-roll from door to door,
A-callin' de people home to God,
Dey'll git home bime-by.
"O, see dat forked lightnin'
A-jump from cloud to cloud,
A-pickin' up God's chillun,
Dey'll git home bime-by."

Letitia became belle of eastern Virginia. Her hand was sought in marriage by many suitors, but her heart was her own until the day she met John Tyler, handsome, talented, the son of popular Gov. Tyler and a Nation builder in those reconstruction days after the Revolution.

After the customary long engagement John Tyler and Letitia Christian were married on the 29th of March, 1813. The honeymoon was passed at Greenway on a part of that vast estate given by Gov. Tyler to the youthful couple.

Theirs Was an Idyllic Romance in an Era of Brilliance.

The first years of their marriage passed swiftly. They were happy at Greenway, but destiny had larger things in store for John Tyler. In 1816 came the call to serve his State at Washington. The young couple was popular at the Capital, their home a rendezvous of the legislators. It was a different sort of social existence that Letitia Tyler led now. Washington was brilliant with figures whose names linger in American history, Henry Clay, James Monroe, Thomas Jefferson, John Quincy Adams and Daniel Webster.

Letitia Tyler was a happy young married woman, her only sorrow the loss of two infant children and her own subsequent ill health. Other children were born, however, seven in the 30 years of their married life.

We are indebted to the wife of Robert Tyler, a son, for a description of Letitia Tyler's personal appearance: "Mr. Tyler's mother," wrote the dutiful daughter-in-law, "is very much as I imagined her from his description. She must have been very beautiful in her youth, for she is still beautiful now in her declining years and wretched health. Her skin is as smooth and soft as a baby's; she has sweet, loving black eyes, and her features are delicately moulded; besides this her feet and hands are perfect; and she is gentle and graceful in her movements, with a most peculiar air of native refinement about everything she says and does. She is the most unselfish person you can imagine. I do not believe she ever thinks of herself."

In ill health when John Tyler entered the White House in 1841, Mrs. Tyler relinquished most of her duties there to her daughter, Mrs. Letitia Semple, and her daughter-in-law, Mrs. Robert Tyler. She seldom appeared at White House social functions. However, when her daughter, Elizabeth, was married to William Waller, a member of Congress from Virginia, she was present, attired in a "quiet gown of faultless taste, her face shaded by the soft lace of her cap."

It is interesting to note the instructions President Tyler gave his children when they came to the White House to live:

"Now, my children, during the next few years we are to occupy the home of the President of the United States. I hope you will conduct yourself with even more than your usual propriety and decorum. Remember, you will be much in the public eye. You are to know no favorites. Your visitors will be citizens of the United States, and as such are all to be received with equal courtesy. You will not receive any gifts whatsoever, and allow no one to approach you on the subject of office or favors. These words you will kindly remember, and let it not be incumbent upon me to speak them again."

She Died Peacefully.

On September 10, 1842, Mrs. Tyler was fatally stricken. She died quickly and peacefully, a favorite damask rose in her frail fingers.

Her gentleness and Christian charity had endeared her to many; her funeral in the east room on September 12, 1842, was the scene of much genuine sorrow. They took Letitia Christian Tyler home to Virginia the next day and put her beside her own dear ones in the family burying ground.

Several years later President Tyler remarried. But it is not difficult to imagine that often in later years his thoughts turned back to the love of his youth, gentle Letitia Christian, the rose of New Kent County in his native Virginia.

A Package of Bacon Kept Handy Will Frequently Help Housewives Out of a Tight Place; Can Be Used in Many Ways to Make Toothsome Snacks.

By Susan Mills.

THERE ARE A FEW things that should be kept on the refrigerator shelf for use in emergencies. One of these is a package of bacon.

For bacon can fill that unpleasant gap between something-to-eat-in-a-hurry and hunger.

Not only good for the usual accompaniment to the breakfast eggs, or the quick filling for luncheon sandwiches, bacon lends itself agreeably to the preparation of a hurry-up supper.

The following recipes will prove popular and will help the housewife over many a tight place.

Stuffed Bacon Slices.

15 slices bacon
2½ cups bread crumbs

Make a moist bread dressing. Place one heaping teaspoonful on one end of slice of bacon; roll the bacon slice around the dressing and fasten with a toothpick or small skewer. Broil, turning frequently to brown on all sides, or fry in pan turning to cook evenly on all sides, basting with the drippings. (Serves 4).

Mexican Rice.

¾ cup diced bacon
1 cup rice
1½ cup tomatoes or
3 large ripe ones
1-3 cup finely sliced onions
1 qt. boiling water
2 hard cooked eggs

Cook the bacon in a sauce pan; wash the rice thoroughly, drain and add to hot fat. Stir occasionally and cook until the rice begins to color. Add onion, tomatoes, seasoning and chili and cook for ten minutes, stirring frequently. Add the water, cover and cook slowly until the rice is tender and liquid absorbed. If necessary add more water to prevent rice from burning. When done garnish with eggs cut in quarters. (Serves 6).

Scrambled Bacon and Corn.

½ lb. bacon, diced
1 can sweet corn
4 eggs
¼ cup milk
½ tsp. salt
½ tsp. pepper

Cook diced bacon in deep skillet until slightly brown, then add the corn. Stir until hot. Beat the eggs until light, add the milk and seasoning and pour over bacon mixture. When eggs are set serve on hot buttered toast, garnish with cress or parsley. (Serves 4).

Bacon and Tomato Sandwiches.

Wipe three large firm tomatoes and cut in halves crosswise. Sprinkle with a little salt, pepper and sugar and place in a pan. Arrange two or three slices of bacon on each piece of tomato and place in a hot oven or under a broiler until bacon is crisp. Serve on hot buttered toast. (Serves 4).

What Today Means

"Aries."

If March 26 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 6:30 to 7:30 a. m., from 1:30 to 2:30 p. m. and from 7:30 to 8:30 p. m. The danger periods are from 8:30 to 9:30 a. m., from 3:30 to 4:30 p. m. and from 10:30 to 11:30 p. m.

If March 26 is your birthday, it might be well for you not to contract the habit of being too exacting regarding your friends and acquaintances, discharging their social obligations where you are personally concerned. Assuming an injured attitude and making unkindly criticisms or comments, because Tom, Dick, Harry, Mabel or Maude has neglected to promptly pay their party call or write a note concerning this, that or the other thing, is at times, not only unkind, but frequently unjustified. Many times private affairs of a personal nature, business, or sickness may be the cause of what is construed by the unthinking as neglect. Frequently parishioners, selfishly desiring only the flattery their ego craves by having personal attention paid to them, will maliciously stir up trouble by condemnatory remarks because their pastor has seen fit to spend his valuable and limited spare time in the manner he judges best. By not indulging in idle gossip or trivial chitchat, many a clergyman has created enemies, and has had his heart made weary by the Pharisees of his congregation. Avoid trying to dictate what the "other fellow" should or should not do. Regulating our own lives is a mighty big job, requiring our undivided attention.

The child born on March 26, as it grows up, will display a tendency through inquisitiveness to investigate any and everything. It must be taught not to intrude in matters of a purely personal or private nature, but to apply its desire for knowledge to things of an impersonal type, which can supply it with useful information and ideas.

The woman born on March 26 will avoid trouble if she learns to apply the old proverb: "Patience is a virtue," in her daily life. It is wise to always be very considerate of the feelings of everyone you come in contact with, regardless of their position.

The man born on March 26 will be more successful if he represses any ideas that to successfully have his orders carried out he has to be severe. Employes or subordinates will work ten times as hard, and with greater enthusiasm, for the man who shows consideration and evinces sympathetic understanding of their problems and trials. Your success will be proportionable to the amount of attention you pay to your business.

People born on March 26 are capable of successfully entering a number of varied fields of endeavor, chief among them being church work, educational, music, literature and engineering.

Rodney Osborne's Bride Is 'Miss Clifton Forge'

Clifton Forge, Va., March 25 (Spl.).—Mrs. Rodney Osborne, the former Elizabeth Lowry, today is the reigning beauty of this city The title of "Miss Clifton Forge" was conferred upon her last night in a beauty pageant.

An audience of 1,200 persons saw Mrs. Osborne receive from T. J. Wilson, jr., member of the Virginia House of Delegates, the loving cup donated by Williams Post of the American Legion. She will represent the local post of the legion in the State contest in Lynchburg next September.

The Dragon Murder Case

By S. S. Van Dine

The Story Thus Far.

Philo Vance and District Attorney Markham, with Sergt. Heath, are investigating the strange disappearance of Sanford Montague in the old Dragon Pool on the Stamm estate. According to Leland, one of Stamm's guests, each member of the house party had sufficient motive for murdering Montague, with the exception of Bernice Stamm, to whom he was engaged. Stamm himself was helplessly intoxicated at the time of the tragedy. Stamm's mother, who is mentally unbalanced, insists that the "dragon" removed Montague because he was an "enemy of the family."

The following morning the pool is drained, but there is no sign of a body. Instead, in the thick mud of the bottom they see the imprint of a scaly hoof and a huge, three-taloned claw!

Searching Montague's clothing Vance comes on a scented note addressed in feminine handwriting.

Searching Montague's clothing, Vance finds a note signed "Ellen"—presumably Ellen Bruett, who was to have been one of Stamm's guests, arranging a rendezvous at the pool at 10 o'clock, the hour Montague disappeared.

"Go back and boss the job," Heath told him, taking the sketches. "And when it's done send the boys home and take up your post at the road gate."

Snitkin saluted and went away without a word.

Vance walked over to Heath and, taking out his monocle, studied the drawings.

"My word!" he commented admiringly. "They're really clever, don't y' know. The chap is a natural draftsman * * * I say, Mr. Leland, here are copies of the footprints we found in the pool."

Leland moved—somewhat hesitantly, I thought—to the sergeant's side and watched him closely during his examination of the sketches, but I was unable to detect the slightest change of expression on his face.

At length he looked up, and his calm eyes slowly turned to Vance. "Quite remarkable," he said, and added in a colorless voice: "I can not imagine what could have made such peculiar imprints in the pool."

(Sunday, August 12, 2:20 a. m.)

It was now 1 o'clock. Stamm insisted on ordering lunch for us, and Trainor served it in the drawing room. Stamm himself and Leland ate with the others in the dining room. We were no sooner alone than Markham turned a troubled gaze on Vance.

"What do you make of it all?" he asked. "I don't understand those marks on the bottom of the pool. They're—they're frightful."

Vance shook his head despairingly: there could be no doubt that he, too, was troubled.

"I don't like it—I don't at all like it." There was discouragement in his tone. "There's something dashed sinister about this case—something that seems to reach out beyond the ordin'ry everyday experiences of man."

Curious Dragon Lore.

"If it were not for all this curious dragon lore surrounding the Stamm estate," said Markham, "we'd probably have dismissed those large imprints with the simple explanation that the water draining over the mud had tended to enlarge or distort ordinary footmarks.

Vance smiled wearily.

"Yes, quite so. But we'd have been unscientific. Some of the footprints were pointed in the direction of the flow of the water, while others were at right-angles to it; yet their character was not changed at any point. Moreover, the receding water flowed very gently, and the shallow mud on the bottom of the pool is rather tenacious—even the scale-like formations on the imprints were not washed away. * * * But even if one could account reasonably for the larger impressions, what about those astonishing claw-like imprints——?"

Suddenly Vance leaped to his feet, and, going swiftly to the door, drew one of the portieres aside. Before him stood Trainor, his pudgy face a ghastly white, his eyes staring like those of a man in a trance. In one hand he held Vance's shoes.

Vance regarded him ironically and said nothing; and the man, with a quiver that ran over his entire body, made an effort to draw himself together.

"I'm—I'm sorry, sir," he stammered. "I—I heard you talking and—didn't wish to disturb you * * * so I waited. I have your boots, sir."

"That's quite all right, Trainor." Vance returned to his chair. "I was merely curious as to who was hoverin' outside the portieres. * * * Thanks for the boots."

The butler came forward obsequiously, knelt down and, removing the slippers from Vance's feet, replaced them with the oxfords. His hands trembled perceptibly as he tied the laces.

When he left the room with the tray of luncheon dishes, Heath glared after him belligerently.

"Now, what was that baby snooping around for?" he snarled. "There's something on his mind."

"Oh, doubtless," Vance smiled moodily. "I'd say it was the dragon."

"See here, Vance"—Markham spoke with acerbity—"let's drop this poppycock about a dragon." There was a certain desperation in his tone. "How do you account for that note in Montague's pocket—and what does it mean?"

"My word, Markham, I'm no Chaldean." Vance leaned back in his chair and lighted another Regie. "Even if the whole affair was a spectacular plot in which the histrionic Montague was to make his exit in the approved dramatic manner, I still can't imagine how he joined his inamorata without leaving some evidence as to his means of departure from the pool. It's mystifyin' no end."

The forthright sergeant cut into the discussion. "The bird got away somehow, didn't he, Mr. Vance? And if we can't find the evidence, he outfoxed us."

"Tut, tut, sergeant. You're far too modest. I'll admit the explanation should be simple, but I've a feelin' that it's going to prove dashed complex."

"Nevertheless," Markham argued, "that note from the Bruett woman and Montague's disappearance complement each other perfectly."

"Granted," nodded Vance. "Too perfectly, in fact. But the imprints in the pool and the absence of any kind of footprints on the opposite bank are two conflictin' elements."

He got to his feet and walked the length of the room and back.

"Then there's the car in which the mysterious lady waited. * * * I say, Markham, I think a brief chat with Miss Stamm might prove illuminatin' * * * Fetch the quakin' butler, will you, sergeant?"

Heath went swiftly from the room, and, when Trainor came in, Vance requested him to ask Miss Stamm to come to the drawing room. A few minutes later she appeared.

Bernice Stamm was not exactly a beautiful girl, but she was unquestionably attractive, and I was amazed at her air of serenity after the reports of her hysterical condition the night before. She had on a sleeveless white crepe de chine tennis dress. Her legs were bare, but she wore orange-colored woolen socks, rolled at the ankles, and white buckskin sandals. Though not exactly an athletic type, she gave one the same impression of strength and vitality as did her brother.

Vance Offers Her Chair.

Vance offered her a chair, but she declined it courteously, saying that she preferred to stand.

"Perhaps you'll have a cigarette," he suggested, proffering her his case.

She accepted one with a slight bow, and he held his lighter for her. Her manner seemed strangely detached, as if both her thoughts and her emotions were far away from her immediate surroundings, and I remembered the sergeant's criticism of her to the effect that she had not seemed as much concerned about the tragedy itself as about something indirectly connected with it. Perhaps Vance received the same impression, for his first question was:

"Exactly how do you feel, Miss Stamm, about the tragedy that took place here last night?"

"I hardly know what to say," she answered, with apparent frankness. "Of course, I was tremendously upset. I think we all were."

Vance studied her searchingly a moment.

"But surely your reaction must have been deeper than that. You were engaged to Mr. Montague, I understand."

She nodded wistfully.

"Yes—but that was a great mistake. I realize it now. * * * If it had not been a mistake," she added, "I'm sure I would feel much more deeply about the tragedy than I do."

"You think this tragedy was accidental?" Vance asked with sudden bluntness.

"Of course it was!" The girl turned on him with blazing eyes. "It couldn't have been anything else. I know what you mean—I've heard al the silly chatter round this house—but it's quite impossible to attribute Monty's death to anything but an accident."

"You don't put any stock, then, in these tales of a dragon in the pool?"

She laughted with genuine amusement.

"No, I don't believe in fairy tales. Do you?"

"I still believe in tales of Prince Charming," Vance returned lightly; "though I've always rather suspected the chap. He was much too good to be true."

The girl let her eyes rest on Vance calmly for several moments. Then she said:

"I haven't the slightest idea what you mean."

"It really doesn't matter," he returned. "But it's a bit disconcertin' not to have found the body of the gentleman who dived into the pool last night."

"You mean——"

Girl Appears Startled.

"Yes—quite. Mr. Montague has disappeared completely."

She gave him a startled look.

"But—at lunch—my brother—he didn't tell me. * * * You're quite sure that Monty has disappeared?"

"Oh, yes. We drained the pool, don't y' know." Vance paused and regarded the girl mildly. "All we found were some fantastic footprints."

Her eyes widened and the pupils dilated.

"What kind of footprints?" she asked, in a tense, hushed voice.

"I've never seen any like them before," Vance returned. "If I believed in mythical submarine monsters, I might conclude that some such creature had made them."

Bernice Stamm was standing near the portieres, and involuntarily she reached out and clutched one of them with her hand, as if to steady herself. But her sudden loss of composure was only momentary. She forced a smile and walking further into the room, leaned against the mantelpiece.

"I am afraid"—she spoke with obvious effort—"I'm too practical to be frightened by any seeming evidences of the dragon's presence here."

"I'm sure you are, Miss Stamm," Vance replied pleasantly. "And since you are so practical, perhaps this missive will interest you." He took from his pocket the blue-scented note that had been found in Montague's day suit, and handed it to her.

The girl read it without change of expression, but when she gave it back to Vance I noticed that she sighed deeply, as if the implication of its contents had brought her peace of mind.

How to Keep Well

Diet in the Treatment of Bright's Disease.

In acute Bright's disease Volhard recommends a diet consisting of nothing more than weak tea, lemonade or orange. A cup of tea, a glass of lemonade, or half an orange is given two or three times a day for five days. No other food or drink is allowed during this period. This sometimes causes a hunger or acidosis headache. Some advise that this be prevented by giving full doses of ordinary cooking soda.

After five days of this very restricted diet the subject gradually returns to a sustaining diet. The first addition consistes of more fruit or fruit juice; and this is followed by cooked fruit, sugar, candy, cooked vegetables, rice, butter, cream. After about five days of this somewhat fuller diet it is permissible to add breads, soups, milks, and meats. In something like two or three weeks from the onset enough meat and other proteins and foods rich in minerals and vitamins to maintain the body in balance should be given.

In any kind of nephritis in which there is dropsy, the amount of salt in the diet should be restricted. Most people eat about 150 grains of salt a day. The amount needed is about 30 grains daily. An excess of salt in the diet tends to cause dropsy in heart disease, kidney diseases, and some other diseases. The foods that are apt to be rich in salt are salt meat and fish, salted butter, sauer kraut, nuts, milk, cheese, most breads, pretzels and meats.

In many dishes salt is added by the cook during the process of cooking. Reasonably pleasing dishes can be prepared without the addition of much salt. Onions, garlic, spice, pepper and some other condiments can be used to give flavor where little salt is used in cooking.

If one is on a low salt diet and carries it far enough to cause leg cramps or vomiting, a dose of salt solution will give relief.

Two Cab Drivers Robbed by Fares

One Loses $6 and Another Yields 90 Cents.

Two taxi drivers reported they were robbed at gunpoint yesterday.

George Leich, 1600 block of A street southeast, told police he was hailed by two colored men near Seventh street and Pennsylvania avenue southeast. The men asked to be driven out Benning road. En route, Leich reported, one of the men drew a gun and robbed him of 90 cents.

A few hours later police arrested two colored men. They said they were William McLendon, 21, of the 700 block Twelfth street southeast, and Francis Walsh, 27, of the 600 block E street southeast.

An armed fare also took $6 from John T. Brown, a cab driver, of the 700 block Park road northwest, he told police. The man escaped near Tenth and O streets northwest.

Employes of Hotels To Ask 1929 Pay

Establishment of 1929 wage scales for an eight-hour work day will be asked of hotel employers this week by the executive board of the Hotel and Restaurant Employes Alliance.

The hotel workers have expressed disatisfaction over the hotel code and have resolved to write their own, it was announced. Re-establishment of the 1929 wage standard will mean increases of 10 per cent and more.

The alliance is made up of cooks, kitchen workers, bartenders, waiters and waitresses. The organizations claims a membership of 1,000.

Radio Waves and Ripples

A ROUND-UP of three of the cleverest child actors on the professional stage occurs three times a week when National airs "The Lady Next Door."

They are Celia Babcock, 7; Charita Bauer, 10, and Charles Belin, 10.

The Metropolitan Opera House is Celia's proving ground. Last year she played the admittedly difficult role of the kidnaped child in Antonio Scotti's farewell performance of "L'Oracolo." Her talents have since been tested by juvenile roles in "Madame Butterfly," "Il Trovatore" and "Cavalleria Rusticana."

Charita is practically a veteran. A part in the drama version of Christopher Morley's "Thunder on the Left" last fall and the leading feminine role in the professional Children's School production of "45 Minutes From Broadway" were her latest performances.

Charles Belin's parents fled revolutionary Russia to Constantinople before he was born. His Broadway career includes parts with Denis King in "Richard of Bordeaux" and in "Music in the Air" and "Tomorrow and Tomorrow."

MRS. Franklin D. Roosevelt starts a drive for completion of the National Symphony's sustaining fund with a speech before a campaign committee luncheon in the Carlton Hotel and over WRC at 1 this afternoon.

Her pleas will be supported by Carl Engel, Library of Congress musicologist; Dr. Cloyd Heck Marvin, George Washington University president, and Dr. Joseph R. Sizoo. Over the same station at 6:30 tonight, Clarence Aspinwall will treat of the business aspects of a symphony orchestra.

The National Symphony finds itself in a similar but less aggravated condition of insolvency than faces the New York Philharmonic. Sixty thousand dollars is needed if the National Symphony is to continue in existence next season. The sum represents the difference between estimated ticket receipts and actual cost of maintaining the orchestra. The Philharmonic wants $300,000 for three seasons.

Whitecaps.

WRC—Helen Hayes in an interview with Francis Healey introduces Broadway's leading juvenile stars, 4:30 p. m.; Anson Weeks and his orchestra, 9 p. m.; Francis B. Sayre, Assistant Secretary of State, "The Administration Tariff Bill," 10:30 p. m.

WMAL—The Radio Guild plays the Edna Ferber-George Kaufman play, "Old Man Minick," 3 p. m.; The Washington Post runs through its files of 20 years ago, 8 p. m.; Hollywood on the Air, midnight.

WJSV—The Gordon String Quartet in the Library of Congress series, the Beethoven Quartet in C Major and Frederick Stock's String Quartet, 4:15 p. m.; Bing Crosby, the Mills Brothers and Carol Lofner's orchestra, 8:30 p. m.; Erno Rapee takes over the "Big Show," with Henrietta Schumann, Ernest Trusk and Gertrude Niesen, 9:30 p. m.

Getting Personal . . .

Before coming to N. B. C., Matha Mears was on a St. Louis station as ballad singer, classical singer, director of a kiddies' club, cooking advisor and style and beauty expert. . . . Absent-minded Marjorie Anderson (above) walked into a radio casting bureau instead of the artist model agency she meant to walk into. The result was a job on National's Beatrice Fairfax dramatizations. After close examination we've come to the conclusion that that really is a moustache on the lip of Harvey Hays, who will act as narrator for N. B. C.'s "The Seven Last Words of Christ," to be presented Good Friday night.

In choosing a hat... or a cigarette...

Let your taste decide!

Costume, courtesy Jay-Thorpe, Inc.

MANY a woman smokes the cigarette her husband or her friends prefer. But maybe it wouldn't be her choice at all, if she let her taste decide.

May we suggest that you put aside your usual brand for a few days and try OLD GOLDS? Notice the appealing natural flavor of this pure-tobacco cigarette; its honey-smoothness. Many women discover, in OLD GOLD, their favorite cigarette. Give your taste a fair chance to decide.

No better tobacco grows than is used in OLD GOLDS. And they are PURE. (No artificial flavoring)

13th Street Widening Job Is Approved

Plan Commission Also Backs Condemnation Law Revision.

King Examines Changed Estimates for New District Center.

Concluding a three-day meeting, the National Capital Park and Planning Commission has approved bills to widen Thirteenth street between Monroe street and Spring road, liberalize District regulations on fire escapes, erect a statue to Thomas Jefferson and give the District government the right of excess condemnation.

Senator King, chairman of the Senate District Committee, expressed keen interest in the proposal to revise Municipal Center estimates downward so as to expedite a prompt start on the delayed development. Conceived as a public works project, it suffered a severe setback several months ago, when Administrator Ickes turned down a request for $4,900,000 to go ahead with the first unit of the vast courthouse-city hall.

Revised sketches submitted to the commission by William T. Partridge, consulting architect, trim the number of marble columns and otherwise provide for construction economies.

The proposal will be laid before the Fine Arts Commission.

John Nolen, jr., director of planning, reported on studies relative to the transportation survey soon to be conducted.

Capt. H. C. Whitehurst, District director of highways, presented his recently drafted six-year bridge and road program.

The planning group took cognizance of the revived plan to introduce subways in the District by instructing Nolen to serve on the P. U. C. committee studying the proposal.

Senator King's condemnation bill was approved with the proviso it be amended so that two or more agencies seeking to acquire a certain property would not have to make separate and conflicting condemnations.

The Jefferson statue bill, by Representative Boylan, New York, was indorsed on condition the site be selected by the Fine Arts Commission.

No action was taken on Representative Wadsworth's bill to establish a Federal conservatory of music.

Mrs. Alice Faulconer Is Paid Last Tribute

Fredericksburg, Va., March 25 (Spl.).—Funeral services for Mrs. Alice E. Faulconer, 83, Spotsylvania resident, who died Friday, were held at 2 p. m. today from Mine Run Church, conducted by the Rev. C. E. Saunders.

Mrs. Faulconer is survived by three sons: W. K., J. C. and T. H. Faulconer, of Post Oak; and three daughters, Mrs. L. P. Ward, of Richmond; Mrs. D. E. Southall, of Fredericksburg, and Mrs. K. W. Pendleton, of Ashland.

Lancaster Reduces Civil Works Rolls

Kilmarnock, Va., March 25 (Spl.). Reduction in Lancaster County from 53 workers to 47 on local CWA projects and from 25 to 22 on sanitation work was made last week.

The county advisory board approved projects for cleaning the courthouse and jail and for repainting the rooms formerly occupied by the administrative office of the CWA in the Hubbard building at White Stone, to be completed before April 1.

Culpeper May Receive State Radio Station

Culpeper, Va., March 25 (Spl.).—Authorities are considering Culpeper as the site of one of four proposed transmitting station for the new State radio broadcasting system planned to combat crime throughout the Commonwealth. Other tentative locations are Bedford, Lebanon, and an undetermined point east of Petersburg.

One of the last bills passed in the recent Assembly provided $75,000 a year for establishment of a State system provided the Governor can satisfy the comptroller that the expenditures will not add to the State deficit.

Post Alone
Brings Results

After advertising an apartment for rent at 423 Cummings Lane, Chevy Chase, in another newspaper without results, Mr. W. P. Nursery Schools Here 25 Years Old

Nursery schools aren't so new in Washington, after all, having been operated at Friendship House and Neighborhood House for the past 25 years. However, Charles Kerns and Charles Palmer, both 6, in the top picture, aren't members of the alumni. Neither are Richard Reed, lower left, with the drumstick, and Virginia Curtis, who is brushing her teeth.

Institutions Are Far From Being Product of Modern Age.

Those who believe nursery schools are distinctly modern, if not a bit futuristic, have a disillusionment in store.

Two nursery schools have been operating in Washington for the past quarter of a century, one at the Neighborhood House and the other at Friendship House.

Miss Dorothy J. Hadley is in charge of Neighborhood House, which has an average attendance of 35 a day. The attendance at Friendship House averages 35, although the school itself is limited to an attendance of 12. The remainder attend the regular day home there.

At 609 Sixth street southwest, the Juanita K. Nye Council House has a prekindergarten school, but no nursery.

Children between 2½ and 5 years old are taken to the school, which has been in operation since 1927, and has an enrollment of 36, under the direction of Miss Lillian Floocher.

Passion Play to Be Staged Today at Fredericksburg

Fredericksburg, Va., March 25 (Spl.).—Seventy-five local actors will participate in the Passion Play to be presented at 2:30 and 8 p. m. tomorrow in the Fredericksburg High School auditorium under auspices of the music group of the Fredericksburg Women's Club.

Dr. Alfred Wolff, formerly of Freiburg, Germany, is manager and director of the company, including 15 featured players, many of whom were members of the original Freiburg cast. Lines will be spoken in English.

Now making its final tour of America, the company will sail for a world tour in June. Hundreds of Americans have signed to accompany the group.

Grade Separation Campaign Pushed

Hagerstown, Alexandria Chambers to Meet.

Hagerstown, Md., March 25 (Spl.). The Alexandria (Va.) Chamber of Commerce will send representatives here tomorrow for a conference with the board of directors of the Hagerstown Chamber relative to a PWA grade-crossing campaign launched by the chamber here a month ago.

The Hagerstown chamber communicated with 1,000 Chambers of Commerce urging them to ask their representatives in Congress to have the Administration launch Nationwide grade crossing eliminations as PWA projects. Several hundred replies have been received indicating almost unanimous approval.

Evick Reelected Franklin Mayor

Franklin, W. Va., March 25 (Spl.). Grover Cleveland Evick was reelected mayor of Franklin in a quiet election yesterday in which only 143 votes were cast, about half of normal. He defeated E. H. Simmons, 118 to 21.

George W. Tarrison was reelected recorder for the eleventh successive term without opposition.

For council the following were named: Otis Shaw, A. F. Hill, R. L. Thacker and J. L. Skidmore. The town charter calls for five councilmen but only four names appeared on the ballot. The fifth member will be named by the men elected.

Confederate Officer Buried.

Big Otter, W. Va., March 25 (Spl.). Funeral services were held here yesterday for James Martin Boggs, 93, landowner and timber operator, who served as a lieutenant in the Confederate Army.

Handcuffs and Keys, Stolen, Lead to Arrest

Lewisburg, W. Va., March 25 (Spl.).—A youth of 18, who said he was Albert Domenic Tuminia, of Allentown, Pa., is held in jail here in lieu of $3,000 bond on charges of stealing an automobile belonging to Markion Hays, deputy game warden.

The car was found yesterday morning in Union, W. Va., and later the man was discovered in bed in a hotel there. Finding of Hays' handcuffs and keys on his person led to his arrest.

Roanoke Relief Transfer Studied

Roanoke, Va., March 25 (Spl.). W. B. Rogan, district CWA engineer, is preparing recommendations for submission to State headquarters, relative to relief work in this area following abandonment of CWA.

A meeting of the Roanoke Welfare Conference is scheduled tomorrow to discuss the situation, and a meeting of agency heads with a representative of the State FERA also will be held.

Princess Anne Pastor Requests New Location

Princess Anne, March 25 (Spl.). The Rev. J. E. Parker, pastor of Antioch M. E. Church here for three years, has asked to be transferred to another field. His successor will be appointed by the Wilmington Conference, meeting this year at Newark, Del., April 4.

Three ministers are being considered as his successors. They are the Rev. C. E. Davis, of Wilmington; the Rev. R. L. Tawes, Ocean City, Md., and the Rev. R. P. Nichols, of Federalsburg.

Mayor Wins Fifteenth Term.

Sistersville, W. Va., March 25 (Spl.).—Mayor W. L. Sutton has been elected for his fifteenth consecutive term without opposition here.

Corner Stone At Lutheran Church Laid

Reformation Services Are Held at Capitol Hill Site.

Building of Initial Structure Is Told by Pastor.

Designed as another unit in the development of classical edifices on Capitol Hill, the cornerstone of the new Lutheran Church of the Reformation was laid yesterday morning by the Rev. John Weidley, pastor emeritus, on East Capitol street opposite the Folger Library.

The ceremony followed a service in the Avenue Grand Theater, where the Rev. Oscar F. Blackwelder, the pastor, preached on "The Meaning of Palm Sunday." Dr. Blackwelder delivered another address at the cornerstone ceremony.

Dr. Weidley read a letter from William H. Finckel, patent lawyer, who was present at the cornerstone laying of the first church in 1881 at Pennsylvania avenue and B street southeast. Prior to this the church was in an old Civil War hospital building at First and C streets southeast.

Excerpts were read by Dr. Weidley from the sermon of the Rev. William E. Parson, the first pastor of the church, on the occasion of the twenty-fifth anniversary of its founding.

Dr. Weidley told of the growth of buildings on Capitol Hill from the time the first church was built. At this period, the Capitol and the Congressional Library were the only two edifices standing.

Designed to blend with the classic architecture of the Folger Library, the new church will be constructed of Indiana limestone on the front and sides, with light brick and limestone on part of the sides and rear. The auditorium will accommodate 650 persons. Under the auditorium will be a Sunday school assembly room, classrooms, kitchen and storage room.

Porter and Lockie are the architects. The construction work is being done by Davis, Wick and Rosengarten Co.

Martin Quinn Dies Suddenly

Martinsburg Man Chief of Fire Department for 21 Years.

Martinsburg, W. Va., March 25 (Spl.).—Martin Quinn, 50, member of the Martinsburg Fire Department for 28 years and chief for 21 years, died suddenly at his home here today of a heart attack.

He was a native of this city and a lifelong resident, with the exception of a few years spent in Alliance, Ohio. He was serving his third successive term as president of the West Virginia Fire Chiefs Association, and president of the Cumberland Valley Volunteer Firemen's Association in 1926. For several years he had been active in the annual summer fire school at West Virginia University. He was a graduate of the New York Fire College, and a member of the International Fire Chiefs Association.

Surviving are the widow, a son, Robert; a daughter, Mary Ruth; a sister, Miss Rose Quinn; a brother, John, all of this city, and a sister, Mrs. Patrick Dunn, of Winchester, Va.

Rites are set tentatively for Thursday afternoon here.

Mr. Keyser was a native of West Virginia. Some years ago he was connected with the postal system in addition to carrying on farming and commercial apple growing operations. He was treasurer of Opequon Memorial Presbyterian Church, Kernstown, Va.

Surviving are two sisters, Mrs. Emma Strickler, of Kernstown, and Mrs. Margaret Mort, of White Post.

Roanoke School Salaries Sought

Council May Borrow for $57,000 Pay Roll.

Roanoke, Va., March 25 (Spl.).—City council will meet tomorrow to consider what to do about meeting a $57,000 pay roll for school teachers, due next Friday.

P. Hill Tucker, city clerk and auditor, says he is of the opinion it will be necessary to borrow in order to meet the pay roll as motor car license payments can not be expected materially to increase the city's cash on hand until shortly before the middle of April.

An emergency measure adopted by the council at the last meeting reduced license taxes on real estate men.

Culpeper Artist's Work onExhibition

Culpeper, Va., March 25 (Spl.).—Miss Elizabeth Nottingham, young Culpeper artist, has entered her work, "Shenandoah's Lover," in the Virginia art exhibition, which opened in Richmond yesterday.

Miss Nottingham, who has several pictures in New York galleries, and recently had scenes from Culpeper history accepted for the offices of Virginia Senators in Washington, has been commissioned to paint historical panels for the Handley School, of Winchester.

Her Winchester assignment came as a result of the recognition she received from the "Three Woman" exhibition of art, in which she was entered in January.

Strasburg, Va., March 25 (Spl.). Funeral services were held this afternoon for Amos Peter Miller, Shenandoah County farmer, who died at his home at Oranda, Friday.

Surviving are Mrs. Miller, two brothers, Harvey P. Miller, of Washington, and Russell Miller, of Oranda, and two sisters, Mrs. Mattie M. Carrier and Mrs. Virgie M. Chandler, both of Strasburg.

Holy Week Rites Open At Churches

Return of Jesus Christ to Jerusalem Is Commemorated.

Services on Wednesday to Symbolize Period Before Crucifixion.

Commemoration of the most significant period in history—Holy Week—began yesterday in Washington churches and will continue throughout this week, culminating in the glory of Easter Sunday.

Bright sunshine melted the snow yesterday, as if a symbol of the Sabbath when Christ returned to Jerusalem and palms flourished where angry fists had been raised.

In Protestant and Catholic churches the sermons eulogized the home-coming of the Saviour. Members of the Catholic churches returned to their homes with palms, a custom long standing.

Seminary Students to Sing.

Services symbolic of the dark hours before the Crucifixion will begin Wednesday. Students of the Sulpician Seminary will sing the Tenebrae at the Shrine of the Immaculate Conception Wednesday, Thursday and Friday evenings. High mass will be held at 9 a. m. on these days.

The Tenebrae service will be held the same evenings at St. Patrick's Church, and the three-hour service will be held from noon to 3 p. m.

The Tenebrae will be sung at the Franciscan Monastery at 4 p. m. Wednesday, Thursday and Friday in addition to other Holy Week services. The Funeral of Christ, with the sermon by the Rev. Sylvester Harold, O. F. M., will be held at 8 p. m. Friday.

Bishop Freeman Preaches.

Bishop James E. Freeman delivered the sermon at a Palm Sunday service at Washington Cathedral at 4 p. m. yesterday. Canon Anson Phelps Stokes preached at the morning service.

Bishop Freeman will conduct the Good Friday passion service at Washington Cathedral from 12 noon to 3 p. m. Holy Communion will be held at 7:30 a. m. and evening prayer at 4 p. m. each day.

Methodist Episcopal churches will hold their annual three-hour service from noon to 3 p. m. Good Friday in the Foundry Methodist Episcopal Church. Dr. Benjamin W. Meeks, District superintendent, will be in charge. The music will be in charge of Justin Lawrie and the Foundry choir.

Guild Plans Services.

Franklin Park will be the scene of a three hour memorial service of the Catholic Evidence Guild, beginning at 2:30 p. m., Friday. Music will be provided by a choir composed of men from the religious houses of Catholic University.

The Rev. Joseph R. Sizoo, pastor of the New York Avenue Presbyterian Church, will give his final lecture in a Lenten series at the Mayflower Hotel tomorrow at 11:30 a. m. The subject will be "Materialism Challenges Immortality," or "What Avails the Sturggle if Death Ends All?"

Bible lectures will be given by the Rev. S. S. Hilscher, author and lecturer, at 8 p. m., today, tomorrow and Wednesday in the chapel of Sixth Presbyterian Church, Sixteenth and Kennedy streets northwest. A Good Friday service will be held at 8 p. m.

A service in French will be conducted at 5 p. m. Friday at the New York Avenue Presbyterian Church by the Rev. Andre Frank Liotard.

CWA Workers to Get Seed.

Charles Town, W. Va., March 25 (Spl.).—Issuance of potato seed to needy families in Jefferson County will be adopted by CWA headquarters here. Definite value will be placed on the seed, and distribution will be made in return for labor received.

Bobby Jones Quits For 1934; to Play Again at Augusta Next Year

Georgia Star Denies Plan For Open

Cites Big Difference in Friendly Rounds and Tourney Play.

Says He Had Good Time, But Was Not Pleased With Putting.

AUGUSTA, Ga., March 25 (AP).—Bob Jones is through with competitive golf for 1934, but he will be back here again to renew the argument with his professional rivals in next winter's tournament, already definitely planned for the Augusta National Course.

"Unless I break down completely, I will play in this tournament in 1935," said the Georgian, after finishing 10 strokes back of Horton Smith, winner of the first Masters Invitation. "We plan to make this an annual event and I hope to participate annually, regardless of where I finish."

Won't Play in Open.

Jones completely squashed the suggestion that he may return to National Open championship competition, however. He declared he had no idea whatsoever of entertering this year's Open at Merion or any other title event.

"I'm through with all that business," he said.

As to his reaction to his first competition since he retired with the "Grand Slam" in 1930, Jones added: "I would have enjoyed myself more if I had got more of those short putts down, but I had a good time, anyway, and I hope the rest of the fellows did. Until the tournament began, I did not realize what a big difference there is between playing these friendly, practice rounds and a tournament where every shot counts. I simply could not get putting confidence and control, no matter how much advice or how many clubs I tried.

Was Not Strange.

"That's the story. It's not strange, because a lot of other golfers have had the same trouble. Otherwise, I felt I was hitting the ball as well as ever."

Walter Hagen, who said before the tournament that Jones did not have a chance to win because he was too much occupied with the role of host, paid Bob the tribute of making a "grand finish" on today's final round.

Snow and Ice to Greet Albany Club at Camp

Martinsville, Va., March 25 (Spl.). Unfavorable weather conditions will greet the squad of Albany Internationals' baseball players who arrive here Sunday night to begin a three weeks' spring training period. Coming from Baltimore by bus Sunday in charge of Coach and Scout John Whelan, the boys will be quartered in local homes.

Cold weather, snow and ice will prevent the squad from working outdoors for several days after their arrival here. Wet weather conditions interrupted work of putting the finishing touches on Martinsville's new baseball field, causing a delay of a week or more, before it can be used. In the meantime, the Fieldale Park, 4 miles away will be utilized until the local field is ready for use.

Between 15 and 25 players will be brought here for spring training, this group to be augmented by others who are planning to work out with the squad.

Pro Settles Argument; 3 Under Par "Condor"

Bakersfield, Calif., March 25 (AP).—G. E. Thompson precipitated an argument at the Stockade Country Club today when he shot a sensational 2 on a 5-par hole.

"What do you call it?" Thompson asked after he had holed out his long brassie shot after an even longer drive.

"It's a 'double eagle,'" said one.

"No, it is a 'do-do,'" insisted another.

Al Seanor, the club pro, said the proper name for such a score was a "condor."

U. S. Down Mountain Ski Title to Duncan

Estes Park, Colo., March 25 (AP). J. J. Duncan, of Estes Park, led 15 starters in the annual National Down Mountain Ski championship race today and won in 2 minutes 58 seconds. Close behind him over the slow 5,200-foot course on Trail Ridge was Frank Ashley, of Denver, whose time was 3:02.4. Lincoln Washburn, representative of the Dartmouth Outing Club, of Hanover, N. H., was third in 3:24.2.

Washburn's running mate, Frank Dabney, also of the Dartmouth Club, collided with a tree after getting a flying start that probably would have given him a place among the leaders. His injuries placed him in bed but were not considered serious.

In fourth place was Robert Balch, of Boston, whose time was 3:26.2.

Scarlex Wins $10,000 Panama Sweepstakes

Panama, March 25 (AP).—The American-bred Scarlex, with Jockey G. Moore up, today won the $10,000 Republic of Panama Sweepstakes at a mile and three-quarters before a crowd of 15,000. Scarlex, owned by Julio Mercado, paid $14 for $2 in the betting.

Best District A. A. U. Card In History Is Listed Tonight

Prospect of G. W. Frosh-Investigation Unlimited Semi-final Has Fans' Interest at Fever Heat; Twin Oaks-Heurich Flashes in Title Round.

TEN men battling desperately for possession of the ball, lightning-like passes, whirlwind dribbling, the goals raked constantly with deady fire poured forth from the machine-gun basket ball hands of prep school and college stars, arms dangling recklessly around the baskets, a capacity crowd worked up into a hysterical frenzy—and there you have a picture of what is expected to be unreeled tonight at Roosevelt High School gym when the George Washington University Freshmen and Bureau of Investigation clash in the unlimited semifinals, and Heurich Flashes and Twin Oaks Black Hawks battle for the 145-pound championship of the District A. A. U. basket ball tournament sponsored by The oPst.

The choicest basket ball menu of the season is offered for the price of 25 cents. Meeting in the curtain-raiser will be the warring Heurich and Twin Oaks teams at 8 o'clock. An hour later the "Battle of the Collegians," featuring the Colonial frosh and Investigation, will get under way.

Interest at Fever Heat.

No local A. A. U. game has ever aroused more interest than the one between the freshmen and Sleuths. For one thing, the Colonials are boatsing their smartest basket ball aggregation in history and, for another, Investigation boasts three former college stars in Walter Morris, forward, former Georgetown captain; Forrest Burgess, forward, one-time ace at American and George Washington University, and galloping Joe Lynch, who used to run wild as a star at St. Mary's College. Playing with these three as the starting line-up will be Willis Fischer, formerly of Eastern High, and Ed Colliflower, guards, in reserve will be Cody Shapiro and Lester and Milton Singman.

Although it was feared that he would not start because of a sprained ankle, Everett Russell, fleet-footed, sharpshooting G. W. frosh forward, will be at his familiar post when the referee toots his whistle. Coach Roland Logan announced last night that Russell's pain had eased down considerably, and the inside sprain will not prevent him from starting, alhtugoh he may not be able to step around as briskly as in the past two games, in which he scored a total of 28 points.

Golfaden Other Forward.

Russell's mate at forward will be Ben Golfaden, former all-New Jersey prep. Gerald Whitley will be at center and Clarence Berg and Ed Yarborough, at guards. Arthur Forst, Frank Levine, Bert Cannefax, Dean Alexander and Jess Farrell wil be in reserve.

Eagerly awaiting to jump at the winner of tonight's game in the championship tussle Wednesday is Trinity, which last week eliminated Boys lub in a stirring semifinals battle. The Frosh entered the finals by reason of victorits over Sigma Alpha Kappa and Congress Heights, while Investigation, 1933 runner-up to Sholl's put out Company E Engineers, Farm Credit Administration and Mount Vernon.

Equally as spectacular as the G. W. Frosh-Investigation game will be that between Heurich and Twin Oaks. On its way to the finals, Heurich put out Simpson's Pharmacy, Merrick Boys Club and Olmsted Grill, three of the toughest teams in the 145-pound field. Twin Oaks ousted Northeast Boys Club by a point margin, Stewart's Pharmacy and St. Stephens.

Counts on Latona.

Heurich is pinning its hopes on its dynamic forward, Anthony Latona, who dynamited his way to scoring honors against Olmsted Grill Wednesday, night when he chalked up 16 points. Another shinig star is Huck Cavanaugh, late of Roosevelt High.

Bob and Frank Schaefer have been the big guns in the Twin Oak's attack, although Jake Understein is considered their ace.

Midatlantic U. S. Open Trials Will Be Staged at Richmond

36-Hole Qualifying Rounds Listed in 21 Other Sectors on May 14; Merion Holds Main Event on June 7, 8 and 9.

By Dave Herman.

SECTIONAL qualifying trials for the thirty-eighth National Open golf championship will be staged on 22 fronts over the 36-hole route on May 14, with the Lakeside Country Club, Richmond, serving as the battleground for the Middle Atlantic test, according to notices sent out yesterday by the United States Golf Association.

The Open proper will be played on June 7, 8 and 9 at the historic Merion Cricket Club, Ardmore, Pa., where Bobby Jones made his big-time debut in 1916, won his first National Amateur in 1924, and completed his golfing "grand slam" six years later.

The number of qualifiers from each district will be determined by the championship committee after entries close on May 1. Only 150 players will be eligible for play in the Open. Of this number, the first 30 contestants and ties who returned low scores in the 1933 Open will be exempt from qualifying.

Foreign Pros Exempt.

Visiting foreign professional players also will be exempt with ten places to be reserved for such contestants. Nor will members of the American Walker Cup team have to play in the trials. Canadian entrants will be required to qualify in the district most convenient.

Entries will be restricted to players whose handicap rating is three or less. The entrance fee is $5.

Headed by the defending champion, Johnny Goodman, the following will be exempt from qualifying as a result of their 1933 play: Ralph Guldahl, whose muffed 4-foot putt cost him a tie with Goodman; Craig Wood, Tommy Armour, Walter Hagen, Mortie Dutra, Olin Dutra, Gus Moreland, Joe Kirkwood, Clarence Clark, Willie Goggin, Johnny Farrell, Herman Barron, Al Watrous, Henry Ciuci, Johnny Revolta, Leo Diegel, George Dawson, Macdonald Smith, Lester Bolsted, Denny Shute, Archie Hambrick, Johnny Golden, Abe Espinosa, Horton Smith, Bob Crowley, Ky Laffoon, Gene Sarazen, Bill Schwartz, Frank Walsh, Tony Manero, Harry Cooper, Francis Ouimet, Johnny Fischer, Lawson Little, H. Chandler Egan, Max Marston, George Dunlap and Jack Westland.

$5,000 Prize Money.

Cash prizes totaling $5,000 will be awarded, with $1,000 to go to the victor.

In last year's sectional trials at the Manor Club, Mel Shorey, of East Potomac; Bob Barnett, of Chevy Chase; Gillie Cunningham, of Burning Tree; Ralph Beach, of Suburban, and Freddie Hyatt, of Charlotte, N. C., were the Middle Atlantic qualifiers, the first four having tied with cards of 144 each. Lakeside, where this season's event will be held, is no new spot to the Washington pros. It was over this tricky layout, designed by Donald Ross, that Shorey, Al Houghton and A. B. Thorn carried off the three qualifying places with subpar golf back in 1930.

Here are the courses that have been assigned the sectional trials:

Worcester, Mass.; Winged Foot, Mamaroneck, N. Y.; Huntingdon Valley, Abington, Pa.; Lakeside, Richmond, Va.; East Lake, Atlanta, Ga.; Brook Hollow, Dallas, Tex.; Fox Chapel, Aspinwall, Pa.; Shaker Heights, Cleveland; Meadowbrook, Northville, Mich.; Olympia Fields, Ill.; Interlachen, Minneapolis; Westwood, St. Louis; Oakwood, Kansas City, Mo.; Cherry Hills, Denver, Colo.; Fox Hills, Culver City, Calif.; California Golf Club, San Francisco; Waverley, Portland, Oreg.; Omaha Field, Omaha, Nebr.; Miami Valley, Dayton, Ohio; Country Club, Buffalo; Belle Meade, Nashville; Oklahoma City Golf and Country Club.

Sarazen Gets 66 In Puerto Rico

San Juan, Puerto Rico, March 25 (AP).—Gene Sarazen, playing in an exhibition golf match with Joe Kirkwood, today posted a 66 for a new course record for the Berwind Country Culb. Sarazen's score was 4 under par and clipped 1 stroke off the old course record hung up three years ago by Walter Cope, Alabama State champion.

Phillips, Molnar Released by Nats

Two Hurlers Are Sent to Chattanooga Team.

Biloxi, Miss., March 25 (Spl.).—Manager Joe Cronin today gave two rookie pitchers their passports to the minor leagues when he sent Leonard Phillips and Steve Molnar to the Nats' Chattanooga farm, where they will be exposed to the tender mercies of Joe Engel.

Phillips, the Fort George Meade Army graduate, was troubled by a sore shoulder in the Nats' camp, but was tabbed as a future prospect. The left-handed Molnar, Wolf Creek (Mont.) pride, was scheduled to pitch for the Nats against the Biloxi today, but with excursion rates offered this morning by the railroads he departed with Phillips.

Horton Smith Winner at Augusta

Gets 72 for 284 Total; Craig Wood Second, Stroke Behind.

Jones 10 Shots in Rear After Shooting Par on Last Round.

Jones than the combined total of players who have finished ahead of him in all open competition over the last decade. While they were about it, the professionals did a thorough job of licking their old nemesis. Moreover, they enjoyed doing it over a course which was designed according to Bob's own ideas and for which he holds the practice record of 65.

Crowd Follows Jones.

The final round, played in bitterly cold, raw weather, was strictly a battle among five front-running professionals, but by far the biggest proportion of the tournament's biggest gallery—upward of 1,500 fans—followed Jones and Hagen over the last 18 holes. All hope of a real rally by the Georgian vanished, when he three-putted the very first green and landed in the ditch on the long fourth as he gambled on getting home with a brassie, only to card a six, but he played magnificent golf from there on.

Jones shot the last 14 holes of the tournament in three under par. He had five birdies, including a 40-foot putt for a deuce on the short seventh. He failed to hole a pitch shot for a birdie on the eighth only because the pin happened to be in the way as the ball bounced softly against it and dropped on the lip of the cup. He came within a foot of sinking his tee shot on the short thirteenth, where he got another deuce. Except for three-putting the tenth, he looked every bit like the shotmaking Jones of his championship days.

Putting Improves.

The rusty old putter which Jones used during the last two rounds made a big improvement in the Georgian's work on the greens as a whole. He had only 30 putts yesterday and 32 today, where he had taken 36 and 38 putts on his first two rounds. Thus, it takes only a little lightning calculation to show that if he had putted as well on the first 36 holes as he did during the final half of the tournament he would have been right up in his old familiar spot around the top. His four-year layoff, it was conclusively demonstrated, had the effect of sharply reducing the accuracy of his short game, although extracting nothing of the power or skill in his wood and iron clubs.

Smith gave a great exhibition of steadiness and resourcefulness under fire in winning the biggest share of the money. Tied for the lead on the first day with a sub-par 70, he held a one-stroke lead at the end of each succeeding round as he met and turned back the challenges of Bill Burke, of Cleveland; Ed Dudley, the home club professional, Craig Wood and young Paul Runyan, of White Plains, N. Y., who started out as cofavorite with Jones.

Spectacular Shot.

Wood had completed his final round in 71 by the time Horton Smith got under way and it was nip and tuck right down to the finish between them. Wood, on the first hole, played perhaps the most spectacular shot of the tournament as he came out of the woods above the green with a niblick blow that dropped the ball within 2 inches of the cup. Going to the seventeenth, Smith was tied with Wood as a result of missing a 2-foot putt on the short fifteenth, but he dropped a 10-foot putt for a birdie 4 that furnished the winning margin. On the home hole, Horton gave his friends an anxious moment by overrunning the cup by 3 feet with his first putt, but he got this one down to settle the argument.

Burke and Runyan, tied for third place at 286 apiece, each saw great chances to overhaul the leader go flitting away on the wings of bad breaks. Burke three-putted two holes on his final round, a 73, was penalized a stroke by driving into the ditch on the fifth and then saw each of his putts for birdies on the last holes hang on the very lip of the cup. Only a blade of grass appeared to separate two of them from dropping. They meant the difference between defeat and a chance at least to tie Smith.

Runyan Has a 7.

Runyan lost his opportunity for a tie on one hole—the 480-yard fourth, where he carded a disastrous 7 as a result of driving into the water ditch and then, after the penalty, firing a long spoon shot into the same hazard, fronting the green. Despite this discouraging development, the former Arkansas star shot the last 14 holes in 4 under par and made a gallant attempt to overhaul Smith.

Dudley was only two strokes behind Smith, starting today's round, but he was in trouble on a half-dozen holes and his 74 dropped him back to fifth place with a total of 288. Willie Macfarlane, who beat Jones in a National Open play-off nine years ago, was sixth with 291. There was a four-cornered tie for seventh place, at 292, including MacDonald Smith, Al Espinosa, Jimmie Hines and Harold McSpaden, who shot the day's best round, a 69, equaling the competitive course record.

Ruth Hits Sixth Home Run, but Yanks Bow

Braves Snap New Yorkers' Win Streak at Sixth Triumph, 5 to 3.

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla., March 25 (U.P.).—Although Babe Ruth drove out his sixth home run of the spring today for the New York Yankees, the Boston Braves snapped the Yanks' string of victories at six straight by defeating them, 5 to 3.

Ruth's six homers represent a new high for the Babe in the spring series with the Braves. In previous training seasons, it was a rarity when the Bambino hit a homer until the Yanks were on their way back to New York.

Whitney's Homer Helps.

Pinkey Whitney's home run off Lefty Gomez, and Red Rolfe's first error of the season gave the Braves their margin of victory in the sixth inning. Pitcher Bob Smith, whom the Braves bought from Cincinnati last summer, limited the Yanks to one hit in the last four frames.

The Yanks outhit the Braves seven to five but were unable to bunch their safeties for runs. Ruffing and Gomez pitched for New York, against Huck Betts and Smith.

18.2 Billiardists To Open Title Play

Schaefer Is Not Entered; Five to Compete.

Chicago, March 25 (AP).—A field of five billard stars tomorrow night will initiate the task of producing a new international 18.2 balkline champion, along with shooting for shares of $7,000.

With the present titleholder, young Jake Schaefer, out of the tournament because of dissatisfaction over terms, Willie Hoppe, of New York; Kinrey Matsuyama, of Japan; Erich Hagenlacher, of Germany; the 60-year-old Ora Morningstar from San Diego, and Welker Cochran, of San Francisco, will play for the championship and prizes. All except Kinrey have held the title at one time or another.

Hoppe and Matsuyama will meet in the opening match, and on Tuesday afternoon, Hagenlacher and Morningstar will go into action. Cochran will meet the loser of the latter match Tuesday night.

Prize money amounting to $4,250 is offered, with gate receipts expected to boost the total to $7,000. The winner will receive a diamond medal and $1,500, with $1,000 going to the runnerup; $750 to third place, $600 for fourth, and $400 for the remaining starter. Charles G. Peterson, of St. Louis, fancy shot expert, will referee.

Duke Nine to Open Season Tomorrow

To Oppose Michigan State on Home Field.

Durham, N. C., March 25 (Spl.). Their line-up set for the first game at last, Duke University's ball players are hoping that the first working day will bring good weather so they will be able to open their schedule with Michigan State in Duke Park Tuesday.

Before the weather put a stop to their outdoor practices, the Blue Devils appeared to be coming along rapidly. They were hitting the ball hard and were fielding their positions well. If they are able to continue their tactics at the bat when under fire, Duke should have a good season in the diamond sport.

Three hurlers will get their first tests against the Northerners Tuesday. Pete Naktenis, big southpaw who created quite a sensation on the freshman team last year, will be the first to work three innings. He will be relieved by Ken Weafer, veteran right-hander. Mort Flohr, "the Flemish Fireball," and ace of the mound corps, will be the last to take the mound. He is a left-hander.

Bluege Stars As Nats Rout Biloxians

Showing Makes it Hard for Bosses to Depose Him for Travis.

Schulte, Klumpp Each Pole Homers With 2 On in 17-0 Win.

By Shirley L. Povich
(Sports Editor of The Post.)

BILOXI, Miss., March 25.—All the figures aren't in yet, but indications at a late hour tonight were that the Nats would be credited with a victory over the Biloxi Browns today by a score of approximately 17 to 0, which is beside the point.

The point is that Manager Joe Cronin and Owner Clark Griffith let Ossie Bluege play some third base today while the young interloper, Cecil Travis, watched from the bench and, as they say in Biloxi, Cecil saw puh-lenty.

Cecil saw Bluege scoop 'em out of the dirt to his right and Cecil saw Bluege smother 'em to his left, and Cecil saw Bluege make the well-known feline family look sluggish as he went places and got things in the territory around third base, where young Cecil is supposed to play this season.

Puts on Show for Travis.

Those Biloxi boys hit five balls down third base way this afternoon and Bluege put on a show for Travis, Cronin, Griffith and the 301 fans, by actual count, who ventured out to see the home town talent play the big leaguers. Ossie's brand-new specs were no more shatter-proof than the territory around third base when Ossie was on guard today.

While Travis watched Bluege with mingled awe and admiration as third base rolled over and surrendered to the ministrations of the veteran, Cronin and Griffith were slightly taken aback in their deep-seated plans to replace the veteran with the young fellow from Chattanooga who bears all the earmarks of a big leaguer.

Cronin and Griffith aren't fooling in their intentions to displace Bluege by Travis—Cronin eager to add Travis' hitting power to the Nats' infield, and Griffith anxious to speed the rookie's development in an effort to insure at least a decade of third-base protection for his club at no cash outlay.

Is Slipping—Like Mussolini.

But Bluege stood out there today defying any rookie to get him off the bag, demonstrating that he is slipping about as much as Mussolini, and the Nats' bosses tonight were asking themselves what they are going to do with a guy like that. The upshot of the matter probably will be that they'll let him play third base, Travis and his big bat notwithstanding.

That tatterdemalion Biloxi crew that opposed the Nats today got four hits off two young Washington pitchers, Mark Filley and Mike Radanovich, two off Filley in five innings and two off Radanovich in four, but the game did not prove much except Radanovich will be leaving these climes soon with his outright release in hand. Filley showed a fair curve and nice control.

Among the things that happened in the game were vicious home-run smacks by big Fred Schulte and Elmer Klumpp with two on base; a triple by Joe Cronin and a triple by Johnny Stone, but the Biloxi pitching being what it was, full credit is withheld.

Schacht Helps (?) Biloxians.

The game ended as usual, with Al Schacht pitching the last two innings for the town boys. A double play delivered him from trouble in the seventh, and with two on base in the eighth, Klumpp's homer delivered him from further trouble.

Score by innings:

		R.	H.	E.
Biloxi	000 000 000—	0	4	5
Wash	300 144 423—17	14	3

Batteries—Demoran, Tedesco, Schacht and Chatham; Filley, Radanovich and Berg, Klumpp.

Runs, Hits and Errors.

Schacht explained to the Biloxi fans why he forced Cronin to hit into a trouble play with the bases full in the seventh. . . . Saying, that with the basess full, there was no place to put Cronin. . . . Umpire Bottle Cox humanely put an end to the sixth inning when he called Dave Harris out on a third strike over in the next county. . . . Biloxi fans were for killing Umpire Cox when he called Cronin safe at the plate in the fourth . . . and left the park at the end of the 17-0 game vowing they were robbed.

Hispano Club Annexes Eastern Soccer Crown

New York, March 25 (AP).—Scoring their second successive victory over the Brooklyn Hispano Club, the Pawtucket Rangers today won the Eastern finals and qualified to meet the Western champions in the National Challenge Cup Soccer competition.

The score today was 4-2, giving the Rangers a 10-2 victory in the home-and-home series, total goals to count. Pawtucket won the first game at Pawtucket yesterday, 6-0.

The Rangers will meet the winner of the St. Louis-Chicago series in the cup finals.

Entry of Several Canadian Stables Gives Bowie Meet International Flavor

Seagram and Smallman On Hand

Will Battle It Out for Purses and Honors Among Invaders.

Mrs. Livingstone to Pin Her Hopes on Showing of 2-Year-Olds

BOWIE, Md., March 25.—The Southern Maryland Agricultural Association's 12-day meeting, which ushers in the Eastern racing season here April 2, will have an international aspect due to numerous Canadian owners naming their best for the various stakes.

J. E. Smallman and Edward F. Seagram, who yearly fight it out for the honor of being Canada's leading winning owner, both will be here to strive for purses.

Seagram is sending Patchpocket, Prize Package and Conflagration, while Smallman's string includes such well known performers as Feudal Lord, Golden Fate, Carbon and Sabula.

Feudal Lord In Good Form.

Feudal Lord showed clever form this winter in Florida. He stepped three-quarters in 1:11 4-5 with 116 pounds up. While he will likely confine his efforts to sprinting, he can also go a route when asked to do so, therefore he should prove a valuable asset to his owner next month.

Mrs. L. A. Livingston, whose string wintered at the old J. K. L. Ross' farm on the Washington Boulevard in Elmer Trueman's care, will also ship here. Mrs. Livingston has one of Canada's finest breeding farms and will pin her hopes in 2-year-olds at the forthcoming meeting.

Track Superintendent Dick Pending is confident everyone of the available 1,300 stalls will have an occupant when actual racing begins, for in addition to the above Canadian stables, he allotted space today to the strings raced by Ex-jockey Paul Ratti, Justa Farm Stable, Mrs. H. D. Cox, C. C. Smithson and J. W. Y. Martin.

Justa Farm Represented.

The Justa Farm Stable is shipping Justa Play, Canon Law and Justa Racket. Idle Victory, Parity and Pass are the mainstays of Mrs. Cox's stable. One Chance appears best of the Smithson band, while former Jockey Ratti, who enjoyed wonderful success this winter in Florida, says it will take a smart sprinter to down his Crazy Jane, one that whirled three quarters in 1:10 4-5 at Miami.

Horsemen are advised to file their nominations at once for the $2,000 Inaugural on April 2; $3,500 Rowe Memorial on April 7; $2,000 Kindergarten on April 11, and the $5,000 Southern Maryland Handicap on April 14, the closing day of the meeting.

Nominations can be sent here in case Race Secretary Charles McLennan, or addressed to 317 Baltimore Life Building, Charles and Saratoga streets, Baltimore, Md.

Letter for Van Orsdel.

Ralph A. Van Orsdel, jr., 6511 Maple avenue, Chevy Chase, Md., Mercersburg Academy track manager, was awarded the "M" with bar at that institution last week. Van Orsdel is a senior and also a member of the academy glee club.

THE CORONATION CHAIR IN WESTMINSTER ABBEY HOLDS THE STONE ON WHICH ALL THE KINGS OF ENGLAND HAVE BEEN CROWNED SINCE 1297...
EMERALDS ARE VALUED AT $1,000,000 PER POUND... IN MUZO, India- AN AVERAGE OF 60 MEN DIE TO PRODUCE A POUND OF THEM...
A 100-FOOT WATERFALL BELOW SEA LEVEL... Jordan Valley- near Damascus...
MRS. LOUISE HOLMES- Hollywood- HER SISTER AND TWO BROTHERS WERE ALL BORN ON ST. VALENTINE'S DAY ... EACH TWO YEARS APART....
3-26-34 McNaught Syndicate, Inc., N. Y.

Emeralds mined in Muzo, India, run about $1,000,000 to the pound. The work of mining them is so hard and the heat down inside the shafts is so terrible that no white man or Indian can stand up under the strain of mine labor. Blacks must be brought in to do the work. Even then the toll in human life among the laborers is high—because for every pound of emeralds taken from the Muzo mines an average of 60 miners have given their lives.

In terms of emeralds the lives of the miners sell at $200,000 a dozen.

* * * *

The stone which serves as the seat of the wooden chair in the above drawing was brought from Scotland to England in 1297 by Edward I. Ten years later it was used by Edward II as a seat when he was crowned King of England. Since that time every King of England has been seated on this same stone during the coronation ceremony.

The coronation stone is now located in Westminster Abbey, mounted in the chair as shown above.

Valentine's Day is an important day in the family of Mrs. Louise Holmes, Hollywood resident, whose birthday it is. She has two brothers and one sister, all of whom were born on different Valentine's Days—each two years apart. Death, also, has appeared in her family on Valentine's Day. Mrs. Holmes' mother died on that day, and her father on the eve of a St. Valentine's Day.

At the Post . . .

with Bill Bennings.

Tropical Park, March 25.

Dear Al:

Well, friend, we enter the last round-up as far as Florida racing is concerned and just when I am beginning to enjoy it. Last week wasn't a bad one for Bennings, Inc. At least two winners every day were recorded and, while prices were hardly up to the usual Bennings standard, you will have to admit that I meant well. Managed to squeeze enough dough out of those three yesterday to ship Mike to Maryland. He will be snooping around Benning and Bowie from tomorrow until next Monday when the big Prince Georges County splurge gets under way. And he won't be looking for stable crap games.

BILL.

First race—Singing Heart appears best suited by conditions in the opening sprint, a 5½-furlong affair. Gets a nice shift in the weights. Steel will be hard to beat if he draws a good rider. Dornoch is likely to have Sorenson up and I'm not a Sorenson rooter.

Second race—Earle Maxwell was scratched with this race in mind. Robertson will do the booting and I believe we will cash. My Selection and Sun Caprice for the other awards.

Third race—Luck In probably needed that last effort and comes to this primed for a good race. In light and figures to lead Billie's Orphan and Don't Blush to the wire.

Fourth race—Crazy Jane gets in with light weight due to apprentice allowances. If the rider lends a hand, I look for this one to be at the pay-off station in time for a collection. Two Tricks and Vishnu to take care of the others.

Fifth race—Field Goal, a Robertson mount, gets the edge over Bright Beauty in this. With Meade suspended, Bright Beauty may not be equal to the task with another pilot. Impeach is in fine form and dangerous.

Sixth race—Patrice Runyon is my special. Closed with a rush last out and I'm expecting a pay-off here. Lawless Lady's last was a beaut. Mint de Mie for the show.

Seventh race—Tom Jack, jr., goes for the Bennings dough in the final. Drusus and Jane Ellen to complete the money picture.

Amateur Hockey Title Won by Detroit Team

New York, March 25 (U.P.).—The Detroit What Star A. C. team today won the National Amateur Hockey championship by defeating the New York Metropolitan, 5 to 1, in the A. A. U. final at Madison Square Garden.

More than 10,000 fans witnessed the hard-fought match.

Gene Vinson, Dixie Golf Star, Joins D. C. Ranks

Gene Vinson, of Meridian, Miss., former Trans-Mississippi District golf champion, is now located in Washington, and promises to be a serious threat for District honors this season. Vinson is in the employ of Senator Pat Harrison, himself a golfer of no mean ability.

Vinson played several rounds last week at Manor in company with Carl Willingham and shot the course in the 70's. The Mississippian qualified for the National Amateur at Five Farms in 1932, shooting a 76-74 to qualify for match play. He was eliminated in the first round. For several years, he has been considered one of the South's ranking golfers. Vinson is expected to become a member at Manor.

Nine at W. & M. Faces Tough Season

Coach Has Small Squad; Loss of Stankus Is Blow to Team.

WILLIAMSBURG, Va., March 25 (AP).—With a dearth of outfielders and only green pitchers available, Coach John Kellison has a tough job facing him this spring in the building of a William and Mary baseball team.

At all odds, he believes the term "Fighting Virginians" will apply with peculiar force to the William and Mary nine this year. The nine most promising candidates are all from the Old Dominion, including four letter winners.

The returning monogram wearers are Charlie Shade, a shortstop; Junie Smith, second baseman and Waddy Stewart, at third, all of them from Richmond, and Nelson Jester, catcher, of Chincoteague.

Added to these will be Aubrey Marable, of Williamsburg, a sensational infielder on the Freshman team last season; Bob Nugent, of Alexandria, first base; Larry Saunders, Warsaw, infielder, and three pitchers, Owen Elliot, Clarkeville; Leonard Graves, Williamsburg, and Fred Stewart, Norfolk.

To Name Captain.

Faced with the task of developing a capable team from a small squad, Kellison indicated that he may use some of his pitchers in the outfield when they are not on duty on the mound.

The biggest blow to the Indians was the loss of Capt. Joe Stankus, an outstanding pitcher, who left school at the midterm. A successor has not yet been elected.

The schedule:

March 27, Drexel, here; 31, Vermont, there.
April 2, Vermont, here; 3, Washington and Lee, here; 5, Virginia, Charlottesville; 11, Maryland, here; 14, Richmond, Richmond; 17, Roanoke, here; 21, Virginia, here; 28, Savage, here; 30, Roanoke, Salem.
May 1, Washington and Lee, Lexington; 2, V. M. I., Lexington; 7, West Virginia, here; 8, West Virginia, here; 17, Maryland, College Park; 18, Georgetown, Washington; 19, Navy, Annapolis.

How's a Fellow to Choose If He Stars in Two Sports?

Nine Boys at G. U. Prep Must Pay Penalty of Being Versatile.

FOR the next two months, half a dozen young men out at Georgetown Prep will be paying the penalty of their own versatility. Equally gifted with ability on the golf links or tennis court as well as on the ball diamond, they are seriously considering making an application to the Administration for a code for talented athletes.

The baseball captain is a mainstay of the tennis team; the golf captain is an infield mainstay of the baseball team and the tennis captain is a likely outfield mainstay of the ball team. In short, all these lads are mainstays. The best man on the golf team is the best outfielder on the nine and the indispensable first baseman of that aggregation is an indispensable member of the golf team.

Two-job Keating.

But here's a close-up of the picture:

Capt. Tommy Keating, of the baseball team, is so good a tennis player that he is already devising a plan enabling him to fill the No. 3 place on the tennis team without handicapping his efforts on the diamond. Capt. Frank Allan, of the golf team, has been cavorting around the hot corner on Coach Joe Gardner's ball team in such fine style that the third base assignment is his for the asking—or without the asking, for that matter.

Meanwhile, Capt. Henry Leslie, of the tennis team, has been displaying refreshing familiarity with the outfielding trade and is a likely choice for one of the garden jobs when the season opens. The net leader exhibits the same lusty power with a bat at the plate that he does with a racket on the court base line.

Maury Nee wants to keep his All-Prep center field honors again this season, but he also wants to stay at the top of the scholastic golf ranks of this section. At present he is working out devious ways and means of filling his No. 1 place on the golf team and retain his rank as a No. 1 outfielder.

Dettweiler a Star.

Billy Dettweiler, the nine's first baseman, is another golfing ball player. Billy's expert conduct around the initial sack has assured him steady employment in that corner, but he has a good share of his mind on the No. 2 place on the golf team. In fact, Capt. Allan and Dettweiler both have.

The latest member to join the legion is Bobby Troutman, the sensational Georgia golfer, whose prowess in baseball demonstrated during the practice sessions appears likely to clinch him a berth on the ball team with almost as much ease as he gained a place on the golf team.

There is only one complaint coming from these boys who are more or less pining away from the sudden inactivity brought upon them by the big snow. They are anxious to get back to their two-sport routine but they wish there were more than 24 hours in a day.

White Sox Show Much Spirit; Few Changes for '34 Are Seen

First-Baseman Bonura Expected to Prove Big Help in Drive; Earnshaw in Form and Should Have Good Year.

LOS ANGELES, Calif., March 20 (AP).—Chicago's hustling White Sox are going somewhere along the American League trail, but just how far may depend on a number of baseball uncertainties. Possibly Lew Fonseca's athletes will not reach their first division objective, but the manager with the tuneful voice has developed an inspiring spirit in the team and the Sox promise to come out fighting.

Henry (Zeze) Bonura, big first-sacker from the Texas League, carries more responsibility than most rookies. Since Manager Fonseca, a good first baseman in any league was hurt last year the Chicago Americans have been out of first basemen. Then big Zeke brought his heavy bats on from Dallas.

If Bonura can hit major league pitching the stock of the Sox will move up. The New Orleans lad has been hitting well enough in the spring games and if he maintains the pace when the pitchers begin to bear down there will be great joy on Chicago's South Side.

Need Mound Aid.

In an active training season Fonseca has spent much of his time watching his young pitchers and if one or two of the rookies make places for themselves the managerial task will be made easier. The seasoned moundsmen, led by George Earnshaw, will be satisfactory but they need help. Earnshaw reported in good condition and has shown worlds of stuff in the workouts. No one in camp doubts the pride of Swarthmore will win a lot of ball games.

Whitlow Wyatt, the former Detroit Tiger, is in great shape. Wyatt has a blazing fast ball and should fulfill the promise he has shown in his brief major league career. Ed Durham is another pitcher who should win his share of games. Ted Lyons, Sam Jones and Milton Gaston are veterans with a lot of good pitching left in their right arms. Incidentally, all the pitching for the Sox will be done by right-handers.

Others to Get Chance.

Lee Stine, former San Francisco Seal, will get a chance to show his wares under fire, and John Pomorski, up from Montreal, and Phil Gallivan, graduated from Buffalo, may do something. Two tall flingers, Joe Heving and Paul Gregory, may help.

Few changes will be made in the infield and outfield. Bonura will take over the first base chores, with Minter Hayes at second, Luke Appling at short and the irrepressible Jimmy Dykes at third. The infield combination may not be the best in the American League, but it is far from the worst.

Al Simmons, Mule Haas and Evar Swanson probably will get the starting call in the outfield, but two fast recruits from the Pacific Coast League, Bernie Uhalt and Stanley (Frenchy) Bordagary, may cause uncomfortable moments for Haas and Swanson. Uhalt and Bordagary have a question mark after their hitting in fast company, but they can carry the mail.

Infield Reserves.

Infield replacements consist of the seasoned Red Kress and Joe Chamberlin, a big boy who did not bother to report last spring but has made up for his absence in full measure this year. Manager Fonseca, too, can give a helping hand to any ailing athlete in the infield.

At first glance the team seems none too strong behind the bat. Mervin Shea, from St. Louis, and John Pasek, from Detroit, are having a mild battle with Morgan Snyder, promoted from Topeka, and Harold (Muddy) Ruel has stepped into the picture to complicate it further. Ruel, a great hand with pitchers, will be something of a catcher-coach, but it would not be surprising to see him do more catching than coaching.

G. U. Golfers Off To Invade Florida

Team Leaves Today; Netmen May Make Trip.

Georgetown's golf team, which leaves tomorrow at noon for a week of competition in and around Florida, may be accompanied by the Hilltop racquet wielders, it was learned last night. Confirmation of two playing dates are needed to assure the netmen of making the trip, and this is expected to be forthcoming today.

A half dozen linksmen, headed by Capt. Joe Lynch, will make the trip, while five tennis players are expected to go. "Happy" Jacobs, former District playground champion and prominent junior contender, and Sendell, equally well known in local tennis circles, are mainstays of the racquet squad.

Virginia U. Nine Opens Season Wednesday

Meets Trenton Nine; Plays Randolph-Macon Saturday Afternoon.

UNIVERSITY, Va., March 25 (Spl.).—Practice for spring sports is in full swing at the University of Virginia in spite of the fact that second term examinations were in progress this week. Baseball and track men, tennis and golf players are all busy as often as the weather will permit. Team candidates are not in regular training, however, and they will not be until the examination period has ended.

The varsity diamond club will be the first to get into actual play, for the nine has only two more days of preparation before its opening game against the University Club, of Trenton, N. J., which plays here Wednesday. Two days later the charges of Gus Tebell have their first college contest against Randolph-Macon.

Trackmen Are Busy.

Archie Hahn, track coach, is also having the speed-up preparations. The initial out-of-door track meet against Dartmouth here on April 6 comes less than four weeks after the closing engagement of the indoor season in which Virginia placed second in the Southern Conference championship games.

Tennis courts are being reconditioned after a bad winter for the first net play against Haverford College here next Friday. The reorganized golf team has its first match on the Farmington Club course against Boston College on April 3.

Virginia's first-year teams get into action just a bit after the varsity men have their opening contests. Baseball will start with the Washington and Lee freshmen on April 9, and the track team against the V. M. I. frosh and the tennis men playing Woodberry Forest School, both on April 14.

Weather conditions have been a considerable handicap in getting Virginia's teams in shape for out-of-door play. Because of cold, snow and rain the Cavalier candidates, varsity and freshmen, have had to work indoors much longer than usual. All coaches are hopeful that a mild spell may give the period needed for practice in the open.

Howard U. Host At Ring Tourney

Lincoln, Hampton Teams to Invade Tonight.

In preparation for the first triangular boxing tournament of the Colored Intercollegiate Athletic Association, the Howard University boxers put the final touches on their training and are ready for the Lincoln and Hampton teams tonight when the tournament will be staged in the university gymnasium.

The Bisons will be led by "Bish" Hart, winner of the Quaker City Golden Gloves last year, and will include nine from a string of the best aspirants for the team. The boxing is to be staged in connection with the defensive arts carnival, including exhibitions of fencing, wrestling and bag punching.

Included on the team will be Freeman Murray, 191, and Bishop Hart, 185, in the heavyweight class; Joseph Stratton, 168, light-heavyweight; Chapelle Cochrane, 163, middleweight; Samuel Brown, 144, and Leonard Veal, 140, welterweight; Hiley Hill, 135, and Nathaniel Dyson, 133, lightweight.

Baseball Drills Begun By Fieldale High Nine

Martinsville, W. Va., March 25 (Spl.).—Fieldale High School baseball candidates answered Coach M. J. Lentz's call for initial workouts last week. Joyce, Dandridge, Tipton, S. Copeland, B. Copeland and Handley form the nucleus for the 1934 nine.

The first game is tentatively scheduled with Critz High School at Fieldale Tuesday.

Labor Dispute Puts Check on Bond Trading

Sales Volume Dwindles in Week; Late Rallying Appears.

New York, March 25 (AP).—Labor troubles were largely responsible for considerable timidity in the listed bond market during the past week and prices generally were unable to record progress.

Railway loans were hesitant throughout in the face of the wage controversy between the carrier managements and workers. At the same time there was no exceptional liquidation in this group, probably because of the fact that traffic and earnings continued to show substantial improvement.

Freight car loadings for the previous week registered a more than seasonal gain and established a new high mark since last October.

Rallying Tendencies Appear.

While mild declines were the rule in most categories, trading volumes dwindled appreciably and, as the week ended, rallying tendencies appeared in the various corporate divisions.

The utilities, as a whole, displayed the most resistance and a number of the higher grade power and light bonds finished with small advances.

With the exception of Thursday, when the turnover amounted to about $8,200,000, U. S. Government securities were quiet and somewhat irregular. Followers of this division, for the most part, were inclined to stand aside until the details of the Treasury's April 15 financing are announced. More than $1,000,000,000 of the called Liberty fourth 4¼s mature on that date. In some banking circles it was thought the authorities might try a new long-term bond offering.

Oversubscriptions Seen.

With the banks loaded down with excess reserves, the belief was expressed that such an issue, at a lower rate, would be oversubscribed and the Liberty loan holders could be paid off in cash.

German obligations were heavy on reports that the Reich was preparing for a further reduction of interest payments on external debts. In line with this thought, the quota of foreign exchange allowed German importers was reduced for April from 45 to 35 per cent of the 1931 requirements and it was also decided to restrict the use of foreign commercial credits by 30 per cent.

Elsewhere in the foreign section the market was thin. Some Dutch East Indies bonds registered sharp losses on a few sales and various French issues pointed downward. The Argentines were among the few rallying groups.

Aylesworth Explains Air Policy on Religion.

The National Catholic Welfare Conference yesterday issued a statement in which it said Merlin H. Aylesworth, president of the National Broadcasting Co., had denied that the National Council of Catholic Men had induced his company to refuse a broadcast period to the Rev. Charles E. Coughlin, Detroit radio priest, according to the Associated Press.

The statement quoted Aylesworth as having been "embarrassed by the interpretations" placed on his testimony before a House committee tonsidering the McFadden bill.

Aylesworth was further quoted as explaining the National Council of Catholic Men was responsible only for a Sunday night broadcast. Father Coughlin, he added, asked to purchase time, and was informed such time was not sold for religious purposes.

Report of Consumer Industries Committee Indicates What Is Necessary in Order to Meet Present Unemployment Problem Without a Dole.

By Ralph West Robey.

It will be recalled that at the end of the industrial code conferences held under the auspices of the NRA, two or three weeks ago, two committees were appointed to study and make recommendations on modifications of the codes. One of these committees was for the capital goods industries, the other for consumers goods industries. The latter made its tentative report a few days ago and, while it was covered by the press, the opinions received, it seems to me, far less attention than they deserve. The points it made hit directly at an aspect of the present situation that must be faced.

This was, in brief, that little more can be looked for in the consumer goods industries in the way of employment. Rather, from now on the attempt to increase employment must be directed at the heavy industries. The problem today, then, is one of removing those obstacles that are tending to hold back improvement in that part of our economic system. Outstanding among these obstacles are the Wagner labor bill, the Connery 30-hours-a-week bill and the securities act. These measures, and they were cited by the committee only as illustrations, reflect an "attitude on the part of political agencies which obstructs the revival of confidence which alone can give a firm foundation for revival of the capital goods industries."

Cities Employment Data to Support Contention.

The accuracy of the committee's contention on the inability of the consumer goods industries to make any further substantial contribution toward relieving unemployment is shown by the figures given. Last November, which apparently is the latest month for which data is available, the consumer goods industries were estimated by the Secretary of Labor to be employing 3,730,000 people. In November, 1929, the number was 4,468,000. There is a difference, then, between the number now being given work by the consumer goods industries and the number employed before the depression of only three-quarters of a million.

To appreciate the significance of this, it is necessary merely to recall that the total number of unemployed in the country at present is, say, between 10,000,000 and 11,000,000. Even were the consumer goods industries to return to their full predepression employment, therefore, it would make a relatively insignficant dent upon the existing volume of unemployment. Specifically, it would reduce it by less than one-tenth.

I can not see, therefore, that there is much room for questioning the conclusion of the committee on this point. We must turn to a revival of the capital goods industries as the only means for making a substantial inroad upon the present volume of unemployment.

Whole Attitude Would Need Overhauling.

On the surface, perhaps, this looks simple enough. It may appear as merely changing the point of emphasis with the result that whereas heretofore the main effort of the recovery drive has been directed to the consumer goods industries, henceforth it will concern itself largely with the heavy industries. As a matter of fact, the problem involves far more than this.

It means a complete overhauling of the entire program of the Administration. It will not be sufficient merely to stop pushing such measures as the Wagner and the Connery bills. These are only superficial manifestations of the underlying attitude of those in charge of the recovery program. These measures must be discarded of course, but far more also must be done.

Specifically, we must modify the securities bill sufficiently to make investment houses willing to offer securities; we must adopt a monetary policy that will remove all doubt as to what is ahead; we must put an end to the WA disrupting private building employment, because of its high wage scale, every time it starts a project in a locality; in a word, we must show that we are interested in maintaining private property and enabling it to make a fair return, and we must show this by conclusive actions, not by pretty speeches that are belied by actual policies within a matter of hours or days.

It will not be easy to make a change in Administration policies but only along this path will it be possible to meet the present unemployment problem by other than a dole.

Curb Market Hit by Labor Uncertainties

Week's Transfers Average 250,000 Shares in Quiet Trading.

New York, March 25 (AP).—Uncertainties created by labor troubles made for a nervous Curb Market last week. The thinness of the list due to the indifference of traders, caused stocks to be easily responsive to varying news developments. Prices changes, however, were relatively small.

Except for a number of brief flurries, dealings were extremely dull. Transfers which average around 250,000 for each five-hour session were slightly under the total for the previous week.

A sell-off on Monday assumed rather sharp proportions among industrial specialties, although recovery followed. Aluminum Co. of America got down nearly 7 points and heaviness also centered in General Tire & Rubber, Safety Car Heating, A. O. Smith and Parker Rust Proof.

Natomac Co. provided some color for an otherwise drab session on Thursday by soaring more than 7 points. The stock of this company is being split-up on a 10 for 1 basis. Gorham Manufacturing and J. J. Newberry displayed late firmness.

Oils, alcohols and metals were irregular. Alternate dips and rallies featured Electric Bond & Share, American Gas & Electric, Hiram Walker, Lake Shore & Gulf Oil, Wright Hargreaves maintained a steady pace, but Newmont Mining met light offerings.

Stocks Change Little in Levels During Week

Automobile Labor Dispute Affects Trading; Bank Reserves Studied.

New York, March 25 (AP).—Financial markets held cautiously to a fairly level plane this week, as eyes were focused on the automobile labor controversy.

Prices were given a momentary boost early in the week, when President Roosevelt first moved to maintain peace in the industry, and again at the end of the week, when a compromise of the employer-employe differences was believed to be near.

Stocks, as measured by price indices, finished the week virtually unchanged.

Attitude of Caution.

The attitude of caution toward securities was based not only on labor uncertainties, but was also due to the fact that the period has arrived in which industrial activity normally reaches its spring peak.

It is true that business has not followed the seasonal pattern very closely during the years of depression, and may not this year.

Barring a possible spurt of manufacturing activity in anticipation of high material and labor costs to come, however, business analysts at the moment do not see much in the way of artificial stimulus to prevent some recession between the spring peak and late summer.

Excess Bank Reserves.

As a matter of fact, much thought is being given to the potential inflation in the huge excess reserves of the Federal Reserve member banks, and some observers thought they saw in the week's Treasury operations a desire to prevent excess reserves from increasing beyond current levels, possibly inspired by fear that once credit expansion really starts, it might go to extremes.

Use of the excess reserves now piled up, some economists calculate, could well bring a credit inflation sufficient to lift the general price level to the 1926 average.

Steel Operation Continues at 46.8 Per Cent

Nonferrous Metals Close Quiet; Zinc Prices Drop Again.

New York, March 25 (AP).—Sustained activity in steel production at an estimated 46.8 per cent of ingot capacity in the past week in the face of reduced specifications from automobile manufacturers owing to labor difficulties, was credited to heavier orders from railroads, larger structural awards and some second quarter buying of miscellaneous products.

The latter was attributed to the possibility of higher prices through prospective advances in fuel costs.

Scrap prices declined, but steel and pig iron quotations were unchanged.

Nonferrous Metals.

Nonferrous metals were quiet. The domestic copper market was unchanged at the 8-cent basis, the undertone still being aided by sustained foreign demand at slightly better than the domestic price level.

Some improvement in consuming activity of home fabricating plants was reported. Revisions of the copper code were still under discussion at Washington.

Although tin prices were advanced in sympathy with higher London advices, the volume of domestic trade demand was small. Uncertainty over the labor situation and contraction in tin plate mill operations from 80 per cent to 75 per cent or less checked buying. Mills were said to have completed recent large orders, although good export demand continued.

Zinc Sinks Again.

A further decline of 50 cents per ton in zinc reflected continued dull demand. Relative quietness of fabricating industries was credited to restricted demand for finished products, especially from agricultural sections. Strikes in some zinc-producing properties was expected to slow ore production.

Sales of lead for the week were said about to have equaled smelter intake and the market held steady at unchanged prices. Demand was extended to April requirements.

Antimony was quiet following the recent advance.

LaGuardia Bares Lottery at Valley Forge.

New York, March 25 (AP).—George Washington was used as an example by Mayor F. H. LaGuardia in his defense of the proposed New York City lottery to raise relief funds.

In a note to Borough President James J. Lyons of the Bronx, the mayor cited Washington's general orders while at Valley Forge, which told how he permitted lottery tickets to be sold, even bought one himself.

The mayor wrote: "In Gen. Washington's general orders for March 9, 1778, at Valley Forge, he stated that a few tickets in the continental lottery were to be had at the pay office. On September 25, 1793, Gen. Washington wrote to Tobias Lear, stating that a ticket which Washington sent to Tobias Lear's son won a prize of $10."

YESTERDAY'S ANSWER.

Walt Mason, Himself

Sport in Miami.

The elements had done their best to make the show a dismal flop; the winds were blowing east and west, it seemed the rain would never stop; the skies were watery and gray, the street was like a turbid stream; it was, indeed, a dreary day when Tommy Loughran met "da Preem." And dreary also was the scrap, in which a large and bulging gent essayed to whip a little chap, and didn't do it worth a cent. In vain the giant slugs and pounds, invoking aid from Heck and Pete; through 15 wet and soggy rounds the little man kept on his feet. The giant won, but what a win! It draws forth "boos" from court and camp; "If this is victory," men grin, "we'd hate to be the 'heavy' champ." The dead game sports sat in the rain, and shuddered as they viewed the brawl; "This is the worst," they said in pain, "that ever chanced since Adam's fall. This is the worst that man has known since history was first set down, since cave men went, with club and stone, to slay some inoffensive clown." The show dragged on through rain and storm, while sad spectators wept and cried; the champeen showed no proper form, and had nine stitches in his side. And when at last the tired cashiers began to count the coin on hand, they said, while smiling through their tears, "True sport is banished from the land."

THE BUNGLE FAMILY Look Out, Herman! By Harry J. Tuthill

WHAT A SITUATION! A BOY WHO CAN'T TELL US HIS NAME AND A LOT OF RED-HOTS COMING HERE TO GET HIM AWAY FROM US.
GEORGE WE SHOULD HAVE TOLD THE POLICE ABOUT THIS BUSINESS LONG AGO.
THE POLICE HAD THEIR CHANCE AT THE OTHER HOUSE WHEN THEY RAZZED THE MAIN EYE-WITNESS TO THAT FIGHT NEXTDOOR.
WHO ELSE BUT THE POLICE CAN PROTECT YOU?
REG. U.S. PAT. OFF. 3-26
AHEM! WELL WHAT DO YOU THINK OF THE DEDUCTIONS HERMAN NEXTDOOR HAS MADE SO FAR?
OH THIS IS TOO SERIOUS AN AFFAIR TO DEPEND ON SOMEONE WHO SITS UP HALF THE NIGHT TRYING TO IDENTIFY HIMSELF BY HIS OWN FINGER PRINTS.
I'LL ADMIT THAT A LOT OF THE TEST WORK HERMAN DOES SEEMS TO BE ABOUT AS IMPORTANT AS DAMPNESS IS TO A FISH, BUT...
WELL HE MAY BE A WIZARD TO YOU, BUT IN HIS SENSIBLE WIFE'S OPINION — AND I AGREE WITH HER — HE'S JUST A MAN WHO READS TOO MANY DETECTIVE STORIES.

JOE JINKS, Featuring Dynamite Dunn Good Luck! By Llanuza

SAY!... LOOK AT THIS!... A GOOD-LUCK PIECE FROM CLIFF AND THE OTHER SPORTS WRITERS!
TO JOE AND DYNAMITE FROM CLIFF AND LACEY AND THE BOYS
THAT'S FUNNY... I THOUGHT THEY WERE ALL SORE AT YOU
I THOUGHT SO, TOO... BUT I GUESS I HAD 'EM WRONG ...THEY WERE PROB'LY JUST KIDDIN'... SAY..... HERE'S A NOTE FROM 'EM!
YEAH?... WHAT DOES IT SAY?
"A LITTLE TOKEN FOR YOU AND DYNAMITE. THE OTHER BOYS WANTED TO SEND A HEART-SHAPED WREATH. BUT I VOTED FOR A HORSE-SHOE. I FIGURED IT MIGHT HELP DYNAMITE IN THE FIGHT, IF..."
GO ON.. WHAT'RE YOU STOPPIN' FOR?
...IF HE COULD STUFF IT IN HIS GLOVE!

DIXIE DUGAN Minor Key By J. P. McEvoy and J. H. Striebel

AFTER THEIR DOUBLE-DATE, DIXIE HAS INVITED HER NEW GIRL FRIEND, FLORABEL NIPPER, TO STAY OVERNIGHT AT HER HOUSE.
SH—H— WE'D BETTER STEP EASY OR WE'LL WAKE YOUR FOLKS
DON'T WORRY— NOTHING'D WAKE 'EM EXCEPT AN EARTHQUAKE
CREAK— CREAK
ONE MORNING WE GOT UP T' FIND TH' HOUSE HAD BEEN ROBBED AN' TH' BURGLARS HAD STOLEN TH' BLANKETS OFF A' SOME OF US T' WRAP TH' STUFF IN—THAT TROMBONE SOLO— THAT'S MY BROTHER, SAMMY—
BZ-Z-Z-Z-
OH-H— HAVE YOU A BROTHER!?— HOW OLD IS HE?
— HE'S JUST A KID — SEVENTEEN—
OH-H-H-H-

THE GUMPS On the Pan

VERY WELL, THEN BIM GUMP YOU LEFT MY DAUGHTER AT THE ALTAR-BY REFUSING TO MARRY HER, YOU HAVE MADE US SUFFER-VERY WELL-NOW I'M GOING TO MAKE YOU SIZZLE-
YOU'VE HAD YOUR LAST CHANCE-FROM NOW ON, WE'LL LET THE LAW TAKE IT'S COURSE-
EDNYFED WILLIAMS — LAWYER
MR. WILLIAMS, I'VE COME TO TALK OVER THAT CASE I SPOKE TO YOU ABOUT ON THE PHONE-
AH YES-WON'T YOU BE SEATED - MRS. DE STROSS - FROM WHAT I HAVE HEARD OF YOUR DAUGHTER'S STORY SO FAR, I THINK YOU WERE VERY WISE IN CONSULTING AN ATTORNEY
BENJAMIN GUMP AS YOU KNOW IS A VERY WEALTHY MAN-ONE OF THE RICHEST IN THE WORLD-HE WAS ENGAGED TO MY DAUGHTER BUT HE LEFT HER AT THE ALTAR - NOW HE REFUSES TO GO THROUGH WITH THE WEDDING-
GO ON-GO ON- I AM ANXIOUS TO HEAR YOUR STORY-THIS PROMISES TO BE AN EXTREMELY INTERESTING CASE-

DICK TRACY Romance in the Air

WELL-NOW THAT OUR PRISONERS ARE SAFELY TAKEN OFF TO HEADQUARTERS WE CAN GET THIS NEWSPAPER BACK TO NORMAL.. OH.. OH— I BEG YOUR PARDON!
AM I TO HAVE THE HONOR OF PRINTING AN ENGAGEMENT ANNOUNCEMENT?
OH-NO.. NOTHING LIKE THAT, MR. PAGE. YOU SEE-I WAS SO GLAD TO SEE MISS PENFIELD WAS SAFE AND SOUND..!..
I SEE! AND HOW ABOUT TOMORROW'S ARTICLE ON THE UNDERWORLD, MISS PENFIELD?
THE CONCLUDING ARTICLE OF THE SERIES IS ON YOUR DESK, MR. PAGE- AND NOW, IF I MAY, I THINK I SHALL GET HOME, CHANGE MY CLOTHES, AND GIVE DAD THE SURPRISE OF HIS LIFE.
BUT... WE ARE ENGAGED, AREN'T WE?
YEAH?

WINNIE WINKLE, the Breadwinner People in Glass Houses

AFTER HEARING THE MESSAGE BETWEEN DR. NOTTINGHAM AND "SOUP" MURRAY, WINNIE (W-13) GOT THE STOLEN CARMANIAN TREATY FROM UNDER A PALM TREE IN THE CONSERVATORY. BEFORE SHE COULD GET OUT, HOWEVER, THE DOCTOR AND "SOUP" HAVE COME IN, DISCOVERED SHE HAD THE TREATY, THEY HAVE LOCKED THE DOOR AND ARE NOW HUNTING WINNIE
I'M GLAD I THOUGHT OF THIS LITTLE AUTOMATIC THE CHIEF GAVE ME! IN JUST TEN SECONDS THEY'LL FIND ME!!
MAR. 26
HANDS UP! QUICK, OR I'LL SHOOT YOU BOTH! NOW TURN AROUND AND STEP TO THAT WALL!
WE HAVE FRIENDS HERE TOO, LITTLE LADY!
YEAH, FOR TWO CENTS, I'D—
DON'T MOVE A MUSCLE! KEEP YOUR HANDS UP AND YOUR MOUTHS SHUT IF YOU WANT TO LIVE!
QUICK, JOE! LOOKS LIKE TROUBLE!!
